FOREWORD

There can be few students of Arabic who have not had occasion to deplore the absence of detailed studies on all the later development of Arabic literature. The vast extent of that literature and the number of works still extant were first revealed by Brockelmann's Geschichte der Arabischen Literatur and further emphasised by his later supplement. But for all its great merits, this supplied little more than the titles and catalogue references of the books it listed. Not only was there no means of estimating the value of the compositions of the several authors, but it was often difficult even to distinguish which of them were to be assigned to different subjects, unless one could consult the original catalogues.

Down to the present time, however, little has been done to supplement Brockelmann's work by detailed analysis and criticism of particular sections of later Arabic literature. This is the task which Dr. Zubaid Aḥmad has set himself to fulfil for the Arabic literature produced in India or by Indian scholars. It is true that, as he takes occasion to point out, most of this later writing shows little originality in conception, though it is by no means devoid of originality in execution. Further, Arabic scholarship in India concentrated almost entirely on scholastic works related more or less closely to the religious sciences, and it rarely ventured into the realms of pure literature or even of history. Yet it would be utterly mistaken to regard it as unimportant or to limit its importance to the few more outstanding works. Not only does it furnish the indispensable background to the active religious life of Muslim India, but its influence has been felt throughout the Muslim world, both directly and indirectly. Such men as Shāh Walī Allāh of Delhi and Sayyid Muḥammad Murtaḍā have contributed essential elements to the present currents of thought in Islam, and the influence of Indian Ṣūfiism has probably been no less effective in the Western Asiatic Lands.

By his clear arrangement and his careful summaries, Dr. Zubaid Aḥmad has performed a valuable service which illuminates a hitherto obscure branch of Arabic Literature and sets it in its true perspective. Students of Arabic and all students of Islam will be grateful to him, and will hope that his example may encourage others to undertake similar researches in this immense and little-worked field

PREFACE

This dissertation was submitted to the University of London in 1929. The Board of Examiners, one of whom was the late Professor Reynold A. Nicholson of the University of Cambridge, approved it for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy. After returning to India, I regret to say, owing to circumstances over which I had no control, I could not get sufficient time to revise the work as thoroughly as I desired. Moreover, its publication was unavoidably delayed. In a work like this it was necessary to make use of diacritical marks and no press at Allahabad found it possible to carry out my instructions. With great difficulty I succeeded in persuading the Juvenile Press to take the work in hand, and its proprietor got some letters (type) with diacritical marks founded for me, and the printing began as early as 1937. But, to my great misfortune, this gentleman died and the work was consequently suspended until the Press was re-started by his brother. He had hardly printed a few formes when he wound up his business and sold the Press and the types to persons with whom it was impossible for me to make any arrangements. Then I made efforts to persuade the Dikshit Press to take up the work but by the time the printing was resumed, the war had broken out and the scarcity of paper and other difficulties which it entailed stood in my way. Naturally the progress was very slow and disappointing. When the printing was at long last finished, another difficulty arose. I had always wished that my book should be brought out with a foreword by

■ CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

Professor Gibb of Oxford but to despatch the book to England was impossible during the war and for this reason I had to wait until the situation was easier.

The subject of the present dissertation is "The Contribution of India to Arabic Literature up to the end of the Mughal period (1857)." The term 'literature' is to be taken in its general sense—as comprising all forms of literary activity in some particular language.

Much has been written on the history of Arabic literature and much still remains to be written. The chief characteristic of the Western method of scientific investigation is to divide a subject into as many divisions and sub-divisions as are convenient and useful for the purpose in hand and then to make researches in one of the branches according to one's own taste and field of activity.

Tha'ālbī (d. 429/1038) was probably the first person to treat the history of the Arabic poets of a certain period by arranging them according to the countries to which they belonged.¹ But he omits India. Brockelmann has followed the same principle in accordance with the more comprehensive scope of his great history of Arabic Literature. He is the first writer to devote a separate chapter, brief though it is, to India under different periods.² After him no one seems to have followed a similar geographical arrangement in a history of Arabic literature. Accordingly, an attempt is made in the following pages to give an account of such Arabic literature as was produced in India or by Indians.

1. His work Yatimat al-Dahr is said to have been composed on the lines of Hārūn b. 'Alī's Kutāb al-Barī (vide Khalīlah II, 4). But no copy of this work is at present known to exist and so it is not known whether Hārūn also arranged the accounts of the poets whom he dealt with in his book according to the countries to which they belonged.

2. Brockelmann's Geschichte, Vol. II, pp. 219-222, 415-422, 503-504.

Connotation of the Term "Indian Work"

Here I may define what I mean by an Indian Arabic work. Any Arabic work produced by Indians, whether in India or outside India and also by non-Indians while resident in India, falls within the scope of the present subject. It may be objected that works produced by Indian writers outside India ought to be assigned to the countries in which they were domiciled, if India is to receive the credit of such Arabic literature as was written in India by foreigners. But in both the cases there are special reasons for such an inclusion. India has always been regarded as a country of enormous wealth, and the courts of Indian kings and princes have always been centres of attraction for a large number of scholars moved by a desire for fame or riches. If learned men came to India and composed books here this was due to the encouragement and patronage afforded to them by the princes and nobles of this country. But such was not the case in other countries. Every Indian who went abroad did so merely in search of further knowledge, having already acquired a high education in his native country. He did not receive any special encouragement or support in foreign courts. If he left India for good and settled permanently elsewhere, it was due to his finding his new surroundings more congenial for the realisation of his research aspirations. Indian scholars travelled to foreign countries in order to complete their education, while many great foreign scholars were attracted to India by the hope of receiving pecuniary aid in serving the cause of Arabic literature. In the former case, she contributed to Arabic literature through the minds of her own enthusiastic sons, who even left their country for the sake of knowledge, while in the latter, she did the same through the rich purses of her generous children.

The Plan of the Dissertation

The contribution of India to Arabic literature may be divided into two periods, to wit, the pre-Islamic period, that is to say, from ancient times to the invasion of India by Maḥmūd Ghaznawī, and the Muslim period, i.e., from the times of the Ghaznawid Dynasty to the Indian Revolt of 1857. As the material for the first period is very scanty, only one chapter is devoted to it; and the second and the most fruitful period of Indian Arabic literature, has been further divided into eleven chapters according to the various branches of Arabic literature as follows :

(1) The Qur'ānic literature (2) Ḥadīth (3) Fiqh (4) Taṣawwuf (5) Islamic Dogma and Scholastic and Controversial Theology and those religious books which do not satisfactorily come under any of the preceding sections (6) Philosophy (7) History, Biography and Travel (8) Mathematics and Medicine (9) Grammar, Lexicography and Rhetoric (10) Ornate Prose, and (11) Poetry. All these chapters with an introduction constitute the First Part of the book, and the Second Part contains a detailed list of all the Arabic works written in India or by Indians. A note on the arrangement of the list will be found prefixed thereto on page 259.

In presenting my work to the benevolent reader and to the equally benevolent critic, I must readily acknowledge that I am conscious of the many defects and shortcomings that exist therein, and I presume many more will be pointed out by those who are competent to judge. For that I crave the sympathy and indulgence of both ; for "whoever composes a book, makes himself a target," says a well-known Arabic proverb. It may be pointed out here that as the printing of the book has been done piecemeal and by different presses and in different years, the uniformity of type and paper could not be maintained.

The system of transliteration of Oriental names and words is that recommended by the Royal Asiatic Society and used by the late Professor Nicholson in his Literary History of the Arabs, viz.,

ث	th	ض	d
ج	j	ط	t
ح	h	ظ	z
خ	kh	ع	' (single inverted apostrophe)
د	dh	غ	gh
ز	z	ق	q
ص	s	هـ (همزة)	' (single apostrophe)

Long vowels as : ā, ī, ū

The final h which is generally omitted has been restored throughout and the vowel sounds which are commonly represented by ai and au have been transliterated by ay and aw, respectively.

In conclusion, I wish to perform the pleasant duty of recording my gratitude to several friends and

XIV CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

Benefactors.

First, I wish to acknowledge most sincerely the great help and directions that I received from the late Sir Thomas W. Arnold, C.I.E., Professor of Arabic, under whose kind supervision I worked at the School of Oriental Studies, London.

I also wish heartily to thank Professor H.A.R. Gibb of Oxford who was very kind to me during my stay at the School of Oriental Studies, and who even now has been good enough to write a foreword for the book.

My sincere thanks are also due to Mr. C.A. Storey (then Librarian of the India Office Library and now Professor of Arabic at Cambridge), for the useful information and advice that he gave me.

I take this opportunity of recording a special debt of the sincerest gratitude to the Allahabad University authorities in general and the late Mahamahopadhyaya Dr. Sir Ganganatha Jha, M.A., D. Litt, LL.D., the then Vice-Chancellor of the University in particular for granting me facilities for proceeding abroad. In this connection I should also like to express my great indebtedness to Mr. Zāhid Husain, C.I.E. (now Financial Minister, Hyderabad State) without whose kind assistance it would have been difficult for me to pursue my studies in Great Britain.

I am also glad to acknowledge the kindness of Dr. M.W. Mirzā of Lucknow University and Dr. Sa'īd Hasan of Allahabad University in cheering me up and in not letting me feel homesick during my sojourn in London by their charming company.

My thanks are also due to Mr. Şaghîr Aḥmad Jān, M.A., of the Commercial College, Delhi, who prepared the index.

I am also thankful to the late Mr. Madho Prasad, proprietor-manager of the Juvenile Press who printed almost half the book and to Mr. M. K. Dikshit who completed it.

There are many other scholars who have helped me at various stages by their suggestions and I am deeply indebted to them all for their assistance.

INTRODUCTION

India and Arabic Literature

Of all the countries that have ever been under a Muslim Government, India (with the exception of the Western Provinces of Sind, Multān and Balūchistān) and Turkey in Europe are among the few that have not been ruled by Arabs or by some Arabic speaking people. Not only that, but India also, on account of her geographical position, could not enjoy such facilities for coming into direct contact with Arabian civilisation and the centres of Arabic learning as were possible for other countries, e.g., Persia and Transoxania in the east, and Northern Africa in the west. Sind was annexed by the Arabs as early as the end of the first century of the Hijra, and it remained in their possession for some time, until Mu'tamid (256-279 A.H.) conferred the government of this province upon Ya'qūb b. Layth, the founder of the Ṣaffārid House; after his death two Muslim kingdoms of Arabs rose upon these Indian frontiers. But of their intellectual activities nothing is known.

Moreover, the Muslim population in India has always formed a small minority, and the strong forces of the rival literatures have always been active. Hence the Arabic literature produced in India is meagre, as compared with the Persian literature of this country.

But in spite of all these geographical and political disadvantages, Arabic could not be neglected by the Indian Muslims, seeing that it was the language in which their holy scriptures had been written, and was the key to the invaluable treasures of Islamic learning. How far India has served the cause of this language is the subject matter of this thesis.

Arabic composition and compilation in India commenced just a little before the time when the general tide of Arabic activities all over the countries in which they had accomplished wonders, had already begun to subside and many branches of Arabic literature had ripened to such an extent that no fresh contribution to them could be expected. For instance, the Qur'ānic works and writings on Ḥadīth and Fiqh, had become so numerous that any original work on the subject matter contained in them remained hardly possible, at least from the standpoint of a Muslim. Other departments of literature, such as philosophy, scholastic theology, mathematics, medicine and sciences, though ever capable of original contributions, had become stagnant for lack of originality on the part of the scholars concerned, and what had been achieved in these domains by the early thinkers was merely being commented on again and again, instead of receiving additions from the labours of succeeding generations of the learned.

Under these circumstances any originality in the contribution of India to Arabic literature cannot be looked for. On the other hand, it would be unjust to under-value her contribution, meagre though it may appear.

It is curious that, generally speaking, there is little or no difference between the Arabic works produced in India and those of the contemporary writers of other countries. The reason is not far to seek. It is due to Taqlid, carried on blindly in India as elsewhere in the Muslim world. As long as the Muslim world had not fallen victim to this great hindrance to the advancement of learning it achieved wonders in every branch of human study; but after it had been overtaken by Taqlid, all its progressive activities ceased. As far as Arabic literature and Arabian culture are concerned, Muslims achieved what they did achieve before the Mongol invasion which, by the destruction of the Caliphate, made Persia free for ever from acknowledging an Arab ruler even nominally and checked that strong current of progress and development which characterized the literature and culture of the past. Then followed an age of mere imitation and compilation. Though there was no paucity of erudite scholars and literary activities showed no sign of diminution, yet, with a few exceptions, no originality can be pointed out in the works of the later periods. The whole Muslim world became the slave of Taqlid; and in every branch of learning the Muta'akhhirūn became blind followers of the Mutaqaddimūn. The decisions of the predecessors were accepted as final solutions of every problem, and thus the learning of the Muslim world became so systematised and uniform that no violation, however healthy and beneficial, was possible.

The condition of the Muslims of India was even worse. Other countries had had their times of free thinking; but in India Muslim literary activities began at a time when the Muslim world outside India had already fallen into the slough of Taqlid, and the Muslim scholars of India consequently regarded Arabic learning with such awe that they could not shake off the bondage of Taqlid. They had no wish to deviate from following the Mutaqaddimūn or to invent anything new, e.g., when Fayḍī wrote his commentary entitled Sawāḥiḥi 'al-Ilhām the orthodox theologians raised an objection that to write a commentary in such a style devoid of dotted letters, was an innovation; to which the shrewd commentator replied that the very first creed of Islam لا اله الا الله محمد رسول الله is devoid of dotted letters. They were so afraid of innovations that even in secular literature, they only slavishly imitated and vehemently supported their views. Commentating was felt to be what the case demanded, and constituted the pious office of the custodian of the learning which previous generations had bequeathed.

✓ Moreover, Islam has never fettered itself under geographical boundaries, as some Muslim scholar has once very aptly remarked that as there is no English Mathematics, German Astronomy or French Chemistry, so there is no Turkish, Arabian, Persian or Indian Islam. And so it is no wonder that there should be little or no difference between the Arabic literature produced outside India and that produced in India. ✓ The Hanafi Fiqh of India, for instance, is the same as that of any other country. The Fatāwā 'Ālamgiri, composed here is as reliable and authentic in Egypt as it is in India. The same is the case with the Indian commentaries on Ḥadīth and the Qur'ān. Slight differences, corresponding to the ancient customs and usages of a country find no place in the books on Fiqh, and are only to be found in the legal statutes of the State, if there are any such. Fatāwā for the settlement of new problems are always based upon the old authorities which are common to all Muslim countries. India has produced many books entitled Fatāwā, the most important being Fatāwā 'Ālamgīrī. The great Indian work on Uṣūl-i-Fiqh, the Musallam al-Thabūt by Muḥibb Ullāh Bihārī is given a place, second only to the early standard works.

As regards Ḥadīth the only work left for the later generations was to arrange and re-arrange them in different ways and to compose commentaries upon them. India has performed both these tasks. Works such as Kanz al-'Ummāl, Lam'āt Tanqīh and Musawwā are of this type.

✓As to the Qur'ānic literature, the Prophet had forbidden his followers to comment upon any Qur'ānic verse without reference to Ḥadīth; and so Ḥadīth is inevitable for Tafsīr also. After the authoritative collections of Ḥadīth had been made, there was no special demand for original commentaries. People, however, went on writing commentaries from various points of view, and are still writing them; but the sources are the same. India produced two commentaries that are entirely original as far as the style is concerned; one is Sawāḥiḥ al-Ilhām in which dotted letters have been avoided throughout, and the other is Jubb-Shaghab in which only dotted letters have been used.

As regards scholastic theology, one may say that this field is so vast that there will always be some scope for original work; but this branch of learning after a time became so stagnant that nothing new outside India was achieved. In India, however, Shāh Walī Ullāh wrote Hujjat-Ullāh al-Bālighah, which, if not entirely original, contains a considerable amount of originality, and its merits have been duly recognised by Muslim scholars in other countries also.

As regards Taṣawwuf, hardly any country showed any originality after composition of the standard works on the subject. India produced Jawāhir-i-Khamsah which is original as far as those astrological aspects of Ṣūfī practices are concerned which have been taken from, or influenced by, Hindū learning. A reference may be made to Muḥibb Ullāh Allahbādī's Ṣufistic works which though not original are highly valuable and meritorious.

As to philosophy, in producing commentaries and super-commentaries which, with a few exceptions, constitute the whole of the philosophical composition of the Muslim authors of the golden age of Islamic learning, India has not lagged behind. Logic has chiefly appealed to the mind of the Indian Muslim; and after the composition of the standard works on logic, in no other country has such a book been written as Sullam al-'Ulūm by Muḥibb Ullāh, an Indian scholar.

✓ As regards history, belles lettres, and poetry, India has not achieved much in these branches of Arabic literature, as compared with other countries; and the reasons are obvious. Arabic was never spoken in India, and the language of the Muslim rulers was Persian. Yet Ghulām 'Alī Āzād was no mean poet, and he left behind seven Dīwāns in Arabic, possessed of distinguished characteristics, and has shown some originality in his poetry.

In the matter of lexicography, it may be said that important books such as 'Uḡāb, Tāj al-ʿArūs, etc., are works by Indian scholars. In grammar, Irshād, by Shibāb al-Dīn is arranged on original lines as far as the plan and style of the book are concerned. In rhetoric new figures of speech were invented by Amīr Khusraw and Āzād, who also introduced some Sanskrit literary devices into Arabic literature.

As regards mathematics, after the classical and golden period of Islamic culture, very little was produced in the Arabic language in this branch. During the later period, Bahā' al-Dīn was a great mathematician in Persia, and his Khulāṣāt al-Ḥisāb, a treatise on arithmetic, was commented upon by more than one scholar in India.

In medicine, apart from commentaries and glosses, on the standard works, Qarāḥadins (books on medical remedies) have been written in India, and they contain the results of the personal experiments and researches of the authors.

In regard to the commentaries and glosses compiled in India, it may be stated generally that they are often more useful and more copious than those produced outside India. For instance, Hājji Khalifah speaks highly of the glosses of 'Abd al-Ḥakīm wherever he mentions them. Professor Margoliouth has, to the credit of India, expressed his appreciation of a Hāshiyat al-Bayḍāwī composed in India, in his preface to Chrishto-

XXVIII CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

mathia Baidawiana.¹

Arabic being altogether a foreign language in India, Indian Muslims have naturally taken greater pains in elucidating the linguistic difficulties of Arabic literature than the people of any Arabic-speaking country. Notes and glosses written by Englishmen on English books are, from the standpoint of an Indian student, not so useful as those written by Indian authors.

Comparison between the Contribution of India to Arabic and to Persian Literature

In India Persian had some advantages over Arabic. Persian is an easy language, and was moreover the official language of the rulers of India for nine centuries. Further, there is direct communication between India and Persia, while the sea cuts off India from Arabic-speaking countries. Hence the contribution of India to Persian literature has been greater than to Arabic. Yet in the domain of theology, philosophy and the sciences in India, not much has been written in Persian, as is also the case in Persia itself. For instance, as regards the Qur'ānic literature, we find that in India only a few commentaries have been written in Persian. Mr. Storey's Persian Literature shows that in India there exist about twenty books written on Qur'ānic topics in Persian. Out of them only four or five are full commentaries on the whole Qur'ān. The hold that Arabic had on Muslim theology, even in India, may be judged from the fact that when Shāh Walī Ullāh translated the Qur'ān into Persian, the Maulwis of his age became so antagonistic to him that they wanted to kill him.²

1. Luzac, ed., 1804, p. vi.

2. Muḥammad Rahīm Bakīsh, Hayāt-i-Walī (حیات ولی), pp. 231-32.

Very little has been written in Persian in India on logic, philosophy and scholastic theology; the resources of this language have rather been employed in the composition of fiction and history, and belles lettres; while on the other hand, Arabic has been very little used in India for such purposes. But just as the reputation of Amīr Khusraw and Faydī as two Indian poets of Persian is unquestionable, similarly, Āzād has earned a name as an Arabic poet of India. Undoubtedly the mass of Persian historical and poetical literature in India is enormous. Much has been written on Sūfism also. But in spite of the abundance of Persian literature produced in India, nothing original is found in these contributions. Of course the contents of new histories constitute new material, but such composition does not connote originality. India has also produced some historical literature in Arabic. In Sūfistic literature, again, we recognise the same lack of fresh contributions. The Persian poetry of India was merely an imitation of the poetry of Iran. If Persian poetry produced in India differs from the poetry of Persia, it differs not in form or spirit, but in artificiality, in richness of imagination and obscurity of metaphors. The Persian poetry of India is much more artificial, more fanciful and more ornate than the poetry of Persia; accordingly, the poetry of 'Urfī and Faydī is much more appreciated in India and Turkey than in Persia, and a native critic of Persia has remarked of 'Urfī that he was a poetical genius but the environments and surroundings of India spoiled his poetry.¹ Characteristics of a similar nature are found in the Arabic poetry produced in India.

XXX CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

↳ This comparison shows that original contributions, in the true sense of the phrase, are hardly to be expected in the case of a foreign literature. So if India has not made any original contributions to Arabic literature, we need not be surprised, to say nothing of the fact that genuine originality in literature is hard to find. Further, it is true that India has not made such rich and abundant contributions to Arabic literature as made by the Arabic-speaking countries or those countries which are nearer to Arabia and have had easier and more direct communication with the centres of Arabic learning. Still the achievements of India in this direction are, in view of her geographical and political position, as much as can reasonably be expected of her.

Here may be given a succinct but coherent account of Arabic scholarship and authorship under the various Muslim ruling dynasties in India.

THE ARAB GOVERNMENT IN INDIA

Sind and Multan were the first provinces of India to be conquered by the Arabs. In the very scanty sources of information which have come down to us regarding the history of the Arab occupation of Sind there is practically nothing to be learnt about the literary activities of the Muslims there. Mas'ūdī in his account of the towns of Mansūrah and Multan, which he describes as flourishing and prosperous at the time of his visit in 303-4/915-16 makes no mention whatever of men of learning, although Maqdisī speaks of some scholars in Mansūrah, one of whom being Qādī Abū Muḥammad Maṣṣūrī.¹ According to Maqdisī, the Qāḍī was a follower of Imām Dā'ūd, the Zāhirite, and author of many works.

Still it is unlikely that these two towns which were in a flourishing condition under the rule of the Arabs were devoid of any scholar, and we find that Abū Ḥafṣ, Muḥaddith of Baṣrah, who, according to one authority, was the first Muslim to compose a book, went to Sind in the early days of the conquest.² Being a tab'tābi'in (Companion of the Companions of the Prophet's Companions), he must have been the fountainhead of the narration of Ḥadīth there, and we may, with some probability assume that the Maṣṣūrah (Bhakkar), Daybul (Thattab) and Multan were the first towns in India to become seats of Islamic learning. During this period many Indians, whether Muslim or Hindū, went to Arabia. Ibn Nadīm mentions two names of Hindū scholars, Manka, the Indian, and the son of Dhan or Dhūn, the Indian, with whose help some books were translated from Sanskrit into Arabic.³ None of these renderings is known to exist except a small treatise by Shānāq on poisons.⁴ Sam'ānī has given several names of the Muslim scholars under 'Daybulī', 'Sindhī', 'Lāhūrī' and 'Maṣṣūrī'.⁵

Maṣṣūrah, however, soon lost its importance, and about 980 A.D. Multan was seized by the Karmathians who made it a seat of their own propaganda.

xxxii CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

Many names of the scholars and theologians that Sind produced after it was annexed by the Sultān of Delhi, have come down to us, among whom mention may be made here of a great saint Bahā'ud-Dīn Zakariyya of Multan (d. 661/1262) and of Abū Hanīfah Sindhī who was a Qādi at Bhakkar during the reign of Muḥammad bin Tughlaq and who was met by Ibn Baṭṭūṭah in 734/1333.¹ He was followed by many scholars such as Raḥmat-ullāh (d. 993/1585) Abū't-Tayyib Sindhī who flourished in the tenth century of the Hijra, Shaykh Ḥamīd b. 'Abd Ullāh (d. 1009/1600), Abū'l-Ḥasan b. 'Abdu'l-Hādī (d. 1138/1728), Muḥammad Ḥayāt Sindhī (d. 1163/1753), Hājji Hāshim (d. 1174/1763) and Muḥammad 'Ābid Sindhī (1257/1841). All of them were authors and were well-versed in Ḥadīth and Fiqh, on which they wrote books, some of which have been mentioned in the present work.

THE GHAZNAWIDS 388-582/998-1186)

The 'Arabs were followed by the Ghaznawids. Their great leader Maḥmūd was a champion of learning and culture and extended his patronage to some of the most distinguished scholars from remote Asiatic countries who flocked to his Court. He was interested chiefly in Persian, but his knowledge of Arabic was by no means slight. He took a keen interest in the learned discussions of the scholars of the Shāfi'ī and Hanafī schools. Not only that, he wrote also a book on Fiqh entitled Al-Farid fi'l-furū' of which Hājji Khalīfah has made mention in commendable terms.² It was during his reign that Al-Bīrūnī came to India to study Hindū culture and learning and to collect material for his famous book, Kitābu'l-Hind. This scholar dedicated his Qānūn-i-Mas'ūdī to Maḥmūd's son, Mas'ūd. He also wrote Al-Jamāhir fi'l-Jawāhir and Al-Dastūr for Sulṭān Maudūd. It was Mas'ūd who made Lahore the capital of the Ghaznawid dominions east of the Indus, and from that time this city has always been a seat of Islamic learning and has produced many eminent scholars and authors. Shaykh Muḥammad Ismā'il (d. 448/1056), the first Muḥaddith and Mufasssīr to enter India proper, settled at Lahore during the reign of this king.¹ Mention may be made here of Mas'ūd b. Sa'd b. Salmān who was attached to the Court of Mas'ūd III. He was an eminent poet and composed verses in three languages: Arabic, Persian and Hindī.

THE GHŪRIDS (582-602/1186-1206)

A few names of Muslim scholars who flourished in India under this short-lived Ghūrīd dynasty have come down to us. The most important of them is Khwājah Mu'īnu'd-Dīn Chishtī (d. 634/1236) who is rightly regarded as the greatest Muslim saint of India. He came to India in 556/1161 accompanied by his great disciple Qutbu'd-Dīn Bakhtiyār Kākī, and staying for some days at Lahore and for about five years at Multan, he finally settled at Ajmīr.² He was residing there when Prithwī Rāj of Delhī and Ajmīr was defeated and killed by Muḥammad Ghūrī in 588/1192. He was mainly responsible for the spread of Islām in Rājputana and after him, his disciples spread all over India, Quṭbu'd-Dīn Bakhtiyār Kākī being deputed to go to Delhi.

Another foreign scholar who might be said to have been connected in a way with India under the Ghūrids was the great Muslim scholastic Imām Fakhrū'd-Dīn Rāzī who was attached to the Ghūrīd Court and was held in great esteem by both the Ghūrī brothers.¹ But as the capital of the Ghūrīd House was Ghaznah and not Lahore, the Imām's sojourn in India must have been short and occasional.

THE SLAVE DYNASTY (602-689/1206-1290)

Quṭbu'd-Dīn, the founder of this dynasty was the first Muslim king to make Delhi the capital of Muslim Government in India and so Delhi soon became another great centre of Islamic learning in this country.

In the time of Iltutmish we find that several scholars sought refuge at Delhi after the sack of Bukhārā by Chingīz Khān.² During his reign an eminent Muḥaddith and philologist named Ḥasan al-Ṣaghānī of Lahore was attached to his Court as ambassador of the 'Abbāside Caliph at Baghdād.³

By the time of Balban, Delhi had become such a large and important centre of learning and such a favourite resort of scholars as to merit the enthusiastic praises sung in its honour by Amīr Khusrāw who compared the city very favourably with the educational centres of Central Asia.⁴ Indeed as the Mughals were still sacking the centres of culture in Central Asia and other countries, many of their princes and learned men sought shelter at Delhi at this time, and thus increased the output of its learning. Firishta says that Balban's reign was Khayru'l-a'sār (the best period) in which flourished many scholars and saints of India.

No Arabic works of Indian authors belonging to the Ghaznawid and Ghūrid dynasties seem to have come down to us, but some of the books written by the scholars of this period are still extant. The most important author under the Slave Dynasty is the eminent traditionist and philologist, Hasan al-Ṣaghānī of Lahore (d. 660/1252), already referred to. Several of his works have come down to us of which the 'Ubbāb and the Mashāriqu'l-anwār are the most important. A book by Shaykh Jamāl Hānsawī (d. 669/1260) who was one of the great Khalifas of Shaykh Farīdu'd-Dīn Shākarganj, is also extant. Muḥammad b. Ismā'il who had migrated to Delhi from outside India wrote a book on Fiqh and that also exists, but all the works of Qādī Hamīdu'd-Dīn of Nāgor (d. 605/1208) who wrote several books seem to have perished.

Sultān Jalālu'd-Dīn, the founder of this dynasty was also a patron of men of letters, as we may gather from the long list of learned men who flourished in his reign, recorded by his contemporaries and the later authors like Badā'ūnī.¹

Of his successor, 'Alā'u'd-Dīn, however, Diyā'u'd-Dīn Barnī tells us that "he was an illiterate person

1. Badā'ūnī, Vol. I, p. 181.

and never associated with men of learning.”¹ Yet we find that scholars and theologians such as Qādī Diyā’u’d-Dīn Bayānawī, Zāhīr-i-Lang and Qādī Muḡhīthu’d-Dīn were attached to his Court. With the last mentioned Qādī, the Sultān had a long conversation which fortunately ended in a reward to the Qādī, contrary to his expectation of being put to death.² On the authority of ‘Abdu’l-Haqq³ it may be pointed out that notwithstanding the illiteracy of ‘Alā’u’d-Dīn and his want of kindness and sympathy towards the learned, his Court was a great resort for the most learned and erudite scholars. Firīshṭah says that in no other age was such a large number of men of letters and science to be seen in Delhi as during this reign⁴ and has given the names of forty-six scholars and learned men of this period. But we know little about their literary productions as no Arabic work of any of them has come down to us. Amīr Khusraw, the poet-laureate, used to compose poems in Arabic as well as in Persian. In his I’jāz-i-Khusrawī he has given Arabic examples of his own composition, side by side with Persian, to illustrate all the rhetorical contrivances he invented. Of the learned men and scholars of this age, he has most highly praised Shihābu’d-Dīn Ṣadr-nashīn for his learning and his mastery of the Arabic language, in which he used to compose elegant verses.⁵ Nizāmu’d-Dīn Auliya’, one of the greatest saints and Ṣūfis of his age, whose Arabic Khutbah is still recited and admired in India, also flourished at this time. And it was during this reign that the learned Muḥaddith Shamsu'd Dīn came from Egypt to Multan to spread the studies of Ḥadīth in India. He brought with him about four hundred works on Ḥadīth and intended to present a commentary of his own to Sultān 'Alā'u'd-Dīn; but he found on arrival that the Sultān did not say his prayers nor did he visit the Mosque on Fridays, and this so greatly disappointed him that he returned forthwith to Egypt. But before leaving, he wrote a long and interesting letter to the Sultān which is contained in the Tārīkh-i Firūz Shāhī of Diyā Barnī.

Before we leave the Khaljī Dynasty, a reference may be made to an Indian Muslim Shaykh Ṣafīyyu'd-Dīn Hindī (d. 715/1315) who, having received his early education in India, went in pursuit of higher studies to Yaman and Egypt. He soon acquired celebrity for his great knowledge of scholastic theology and jurisprudence, and became known as a great author.

THE TUGHLAQ DYNASTY

Sultān Ghiyāthu'd-Dīn, the founder of the Tughlaq Dynasty, had a great respect for religion and learned men, and it is recorded that on one occasion when a polemical discussion was being held in his presence on the subject of Samā' (Sūfistic music) the leader of the controversy, Shaykh Nizāmu'd-Dīn Auliā', so skilfully defended its lawfulness that the Sultān, who had previously held Samā' to be unlawful, was converted to the opposite opinion.¹

The next Sultān of this house, Muḥammad b. Tughlaq was a versatile scholar and also a patron of learning. He deputed Mu'īnu'd-Dīn 'Imrānī of Delhi, an eminent scholar and author of several works, to go to Shirāz to induce Qāḍī 'Aḍudu'd-Dīn ijī, the author of the Mawāqif, to come to Delhi; but when the report of his mission was brought to the notice of Abū Ishāq, the ruler of Shirāz, he did not allow the Qāḍī to leave his home.¹ Muḥammad bin Tughlaq also ordered another noted theologian, Shamsu'd-Dīn Yaḥyā to proceed to Kashmīr to spread Islām there, but due to sudden illness he could not undertake the mission.²

Yet, strangely enough, in spite of his being thus well disposed towards the learned, and himself a scholar, there was not the same concourse of the literati in Delhi under Muḥammad Tughlaq as there had been in the time of the illiterate 'Alā'u'd-Dīn. We learn, in deed, from 'Abdu'l-Ḥaqq Ḥaqqī that, after the reign of the last-named monarch, the standard of wisdom and erudition began to sink to a lower level, and although Sultān Muḥammad appreciated all kinds of learning, yet there was not such a number of learned men flourishing in his time as during the reign of that Khaljī monarch.³

His successor Fīrūz, besides being one of the most pious Muslim kings of India, was a great scholar and patron of learning. His reign produced many authors, most of whom wrote books on Fiqh. Mention may be made here of such scholars as Maulānā Khawājā, the teacher of Shihābu'd-Dīn Daulatābādī, Qāḍī Ḥamīdu'd-

Dīn of Delhi, the author of a commentary of the Hidāyah, Ḥusāmu'd-Dīn Dihlawī, the author of the Biḥāru'z-zākhīrah, Aḥmad Thānesarī, an Arabic poet whose Qaṣīdatu'l-dāliyyah is admired for its beauty and elegance, and 'Abdu'l-Muqtadir, who also used to compose verses in Arabic of which al-Qaṣīdatu'llāmiyyah, composed in reply to the Lāmiyyatu'l-'Ajam is a masterpiece.

Another patron of learning, attached to the Court of Firūz was Tātār Khān, under whose patronage a compendium of Fiqh, entitled al-Fatāwā al-Tātār Khāniyyah was composed by the eminent scholar 'Ālim b. 'Aṭā' Andapathī. Nor must we forget that Majdu'd-Dīn Firūzābādī, the author of the well-known lexicon, al-Qāmūs, visited India during the reign of this Sultān.

While speaking of the scholars and authors of the Tughlaq period, mention may be made of 'Umar b. Ishāq al-Hindī, who having studied under eminent theologians of Delhi, such as Wajīhu'd-Dīn Dihlawī, Shamsu'd-Dīn Khatīb Dihlawī, etc., went for further studies to Egypt where he rose so high as an erudite scholar that he was appointed to the post of Qāḍī al-Qūḍāt. He was the author of several works.

It may be pointed out that besides Sind, Multan, Lahore and Delhi, Kashmīr had also become a seat of Muslim learning by this time. A short account of the Muslim scholars of Kashmīr will be given later on.

THE SAYYID DYNASTY

(817-855/1414-1451)

This dynasty was very short-lived; the last king having retired from Delhi, power was assumed by Bahlūl

XI CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

Lūdī, the founder of the new dynasty. The last representative of the Sayyid Dynasty lived at Badā'un for thirty years, thus causing the town to rise into prominence as a new centre of Muslim learning.

THE LŪDĪ DYNASTY (855-930/1451-1526)

Bahlūl Lūdī, the founder of the new dynasty, gave a great impetus to Muslim scholarship during his reign. But under his son Sikandar, the most remarkable ruler of the dynasty, Agra became the capital of the Empire and made such rapid progress that it soon became a rival of Delhi. It attracted men of letters and arts. This king was so fond of learning that he himself often used to attend the lectures of the learned 'Abd Ullāh Tulanbī, an eminent scholar of high philosophical attainments, taking his seat unobtrusively so that his class might not be disturbed.¹

This 'Abd Ullāh originally belonged to the district of Multan, but attracted by the royal patronage, he went to the Court of Delhi, where he considerably raised the standard of philosophical studies which, like that of scholastic theology, had formerly been very low. A work of his on logic has come down to us.

Sikandar also attracted to his Court at Agra the eminent Muḥaddith Rafī'u'd-Dīn Shīrāzī, a pupil of Muḥaqqiq Jalālu'd-Dīn Dawwānī in philosophy and a pupil of the great traditionist Sakhāwī in Ḥadīth. Before his arrival in India only Fiqh was studied in this country; but it was he who greatly encouraged the study of Ḥadīth. His pupil Abu'l-Faṭḥ of Thānesar, who was one of the teachers of 'Abdu'l-Qādir Badā'ūnī was also well-versed in this branch of Islamic learning.¹ Among other authors who flourished during the reign of this dynasty mention may be made of Abu'l-Faḍā'il Sa'du'd-Dīn of Delhi who wrote books on Fiqh.

It may be pointed out here that the Lūdī Dynasty was not the only Muslim ruling house in India in the 14th and 15th centuries. The Muslim India was then divided into several kingdoms, most of them patronised Islamic learning and produced some Arabic scholars and writers. For a survey of Arabic scholarship and authorship, we have to refer to those kingdoms one by one.

THE PROVINCIAL DYNASTIES OF INDIA

Stanley Lane-Poole says in his Mohammadan Dynasties that "the Empire of Muḥammad b. Tughlaq included the whole of Hindūstān, together with Telingana and other districts in the Deccan. Before his death the more distant provinces began to grow into independence, and soon after the beginning of the 15th century the greater part of his dominions was in the hands of seven provincial Mohammadan dynasties, besides the Hindū Rājās."² Now we take them up one by one.

THE GOVERNORS AND KINGS OF BENGAL (599-984/1202-1576)

Bengal being much more remote from Arabia than any other part of India, it is but natural that this province should have produced fewer Arabic authors of eminence. Moreover, its Muslim rulers took up the cause of the vernacular from the very beginning and so the Muslim authors of Bengal generally adopted Persian and Bengali as the vehicle of their thought and the medium of their composition. In this land Lakhnauti and Murshidābād were the chief centres of Islamic studies. In later times Būhār, a village in the district of Burdwān, also rose in prominence as a Muslim educational centre, where the intellectual magnet of Lucknow, 'Abdu'l-'Alī, better known as Bāhru'l-'ulūm (the ocean of learning) and his pupils lectured for some time.

The Governors and Kings of Bengal exercised their sway over Bihār also. No works of its early Arabic writers have come down to us; but we have records of several authors of Bihār who flourished during the Mughal period. A reference will be made to some of them at the proper place.

SHARQĪ KINGDOM OF JAUNPŪR (796-905/1394-1500)

The Sharqī Dynasty, though short-lived, patronised learning and education to such a degree that Jaunpūr continued to be a great seat of Islamic studies long after the kingdom had been overthrown by the Imperial Dynasty. Shāh-Jahān used to call it "Shīrāz-i-Hind". One zealous king of this house, Ibrāhīm Sharqī, was a great patron of learning and was very fond of the company of learned men. The following anecdote, given by Firishṭah,¹ illustrates the high esteem in which he held scholars and men of letters. Qāḍī Shihābu'd-Dīn Daulatābādī, an eminent scholar and author of the age, once fell seriously ill, and the king went to see him. While sitting by the bed of the patient, he asked for a glass of water, and when it was handed over to him, he passed it three times around the learned invalid's head and then drank it, praying thus; "O God! let me endure all the troubles that my Qāḍī is destined to meet, and restore him to health." This scholar, besides being a good theologian and jurist, was also a great grammarian and philologist and has left several works. Another author of this period is Ilāh-dād Jaunpūrī. But perhaps the most famous scholar that Jaunpūr has produced was Muḥammad Jaunpūrī (d. 910/1505) who, having claimed to be Mahdīyy-i-mau'ūd (the promised Mahdī) founded a new sect in Islām, the adherents of which are still found in Jaipur state and the Deccan.

During the Mughal period, many scholars and writers arose from Jaunpūr, such as 'Abdu'l-Awwal (d. 968), Mullā Maḥmūd (d. 1062/1651) who was a great philosopher, 'Abdu'r-Rashīd (d. 1083/1672), Mullā Jīwan (d. 1130/1718), etc. All of them have left good works. Amongst those scholars who shared jointly the composition of the Fatāwā-i-'Ālamgīrī, we find some learned men of Jaunpūr also such as Mullā Ḥāmid, Muḥammad Ḥusayn, Jalālu'd-Dīn, etc.

The remnants of the past literary glory of this city are still to be found in the neighbouring towns. Chir-yākot and A'zamgarh, for instance, are still noted for learning. While the former has produced several scholars such as Qāḍī 'Aṭā' Rasūl, Qāḍī 'Alī Akbar, Muḥammad Fārūq and 'Ināyat Rasūl, the latter has

THE KINGDOM OF MĀLWA

(804-937/1401-1530)

The kings of Mālwa were great patrons of learning, especially Sultān Maḥmūd who extended his patronage to scholars and learned men in his dominion. Among the men of letters belonging to Mālwa mention may be made here of one Shāh Aḥmad Shar'ī Chandairī (d 928/1521) who was both a Ṣūfī and a scholar. The two couplets which he composed in Arabic in reply to the two, versified by the great Zamakhsharī, the author of the Kashshāf have come down to us.¹

THE KINGDOM OF GUJARĀT

(799-980/1396-1572)

Aḥmad Shāh I founded the city of Aḥmadābād which soon became the capital of the kingdom and rose into prominence as a seat of learning where a large number of the literati and doctors of law were attracted by the generosity of the rulers. Before this kingdom was founded, pilgrims to the Ḥijāz generally travelled overland in preference to using the sea route, but when the rulers of Gujarāt grew more powerful and their sway extended up to the coast, they organised the sea traffic and thereby greatly facilitated the pilgrimage and attracted many Arab scholars to Aḥmadābād and the Deccan States. Hence the growth of Aḥmadābād as an important seat of Islamic learning.

During the reign of Aḥmad Shāh I, Nūru'd-Dīn Shīrāzī, a pupil of Sayyid Sharīf 'Alī b. Muḥammad and a Muḥaddith, migrated from Persia to Aḥmadābād. Another scholar who came to Gujarāt was Wajīhu'd-Dīn Muḥammad Mālikī upon whom the king conferred the title of Maliku'l-Muḥaddithīn (the king of traditionists). Both of them gave a great impetus to the study of Ḥadīth among the Muslims of Gujarāt. Mention may be made here of a third foreign scholar, Ibnu'd-Damāmīnī, a native of Egypt, who came to India and composed some works for Aḥmad Shāh I.

Due to the facilities of communication between Arabia and Gujarāt, the latter produced, during this period, many Arabic authors of repute, such as 'Alī b. Aḥmad Mahā'imī (d. 835/1432) who wrote a commentary on the Qur'ān and a book on Fiqh; Qādī Chakan (d. 920/1514) who composed a compendium on Fiqh; Muḥammad b. Ṭāhir of Pattan (d. 986/1578) the author of an important dictionary of Ḥadīth, etc. There was an author attached to the court of this kingdom who deserves special mention. He is 'Abd Ullāh Muḥammad b. Sirāju'd-Dīn 'Umar al-Nahrwālī al-Uluḡkhānī, called Ḥājī Dabīr (d. after 1020/1611) and wrote the history of Gujarāt which has been edited in three volumes by Sir Denison Ross, who has added a valuable introduction to it.

Mughals. Among such authors, we may make mention of Shaykh Wajihu'd-Dīn (d. 998/1589), Sayyid Shibhat Ullāh Barūjī, 'Abdu'l-Qādir al-'Aydārūs (d. 1038/1628) and Nūru'd-Dīn Gujarātī (d. 1155/1742). All of them have left several works.

THE KINGDOM OF KHĀNDĪSH (801-1008/1399-1599)

Burhānpur, the capital of this kingdom was not behind in literary advancement and produced such scholars as 'Alī Muttaqī (d. 975/1567), the author of Kanzu'l-'Ummāl, Shāh Faḍl Ullāh known as Nā'ib-i-Rasūl Ullāh (d. 1005/1596) and Qāḍī Naṣīru'd-Dīn (d. 1031/1621), whose son Shaykh Nizām Burhānpurī was an eminent jurist under whose supervision the Fatāwā-i-'Ālamgiri was compiled by the order of Aurangzib.

THE BAHMANĪ KINGDOM (748-933/1347-1526)

Many scholars and theologians were attached to the court of this dynasty. Amongst them Mullā 'Abdu'l-Ghanī Ṣadr and Najmu'd-Dīn Muftī may be mentioned here;¹ but the author whose Arabic works have come down to us is the well-known Saint of the Deccan Sayyid Muḥammad known as Gīsū-Darāz, a disciple of Naṣīru'd-Dīn Maḥmūd Chirāgh-i-Dihlī. He was held in great esteem and reverence by Aḥmad Shāh Bahmanī. As for sometime the Bahmanids' sway extended to the Arabian sea, the Arab scholars of Sūrat and Mahā'im enjoyed the patronage of this dynasty.

THE FIVE DECCAN DYNASTIES

The decline of the Bahmanī kingdom was followed by the rise of five Deccan kingdoms of which three—the ‘Ādil Shāhī House of Bījāpūr, the Quṭb Shāhī House of Golkanda and the Nizām Shāhī House of Aḥmad-nagar—are worthy of mention.

(i) THE ĀDIL SHĀHĪ KINGDOM OF BĪJĀPŪR
(895-1097/1489-1686)

This House was noted for its patronage of learning and possessed a magnificent library containing a valuable collection of manuscripts, some of which are now in the India Office Library, London.¹ Bījāpūr also attracted scholars from Arabia. Among them mention may be made of one Ḥasan b. ‘Alī Shadqam (d. 1046/1636) who was an Arab and in his youth he came to India and attached himself to this Court. He was an author and a poet. Another scholar worthy of note is Zaynu’-d-Dīn al-Ma’barī who dedicated his Tuḥfatu’l-Mujāhidīn to ‘Alī ‘Ādil Shāh.

(ii) QUṬB SHĀHĪ KINGDOM OF GOLKANDA
(918-1098/1512-1687)

Some of the kings of this line also attracted to their courts several scholars from Arabia, amongst whom was the father of Ibn Ma’sūm, the author of the Sulāfatul-‘aṣr and of several other works. It was in fact due to the generosity of this house that Ibn Ma’sūm himself came to India from Arabia. He has given a vivid account of his voyage in a book which has come down to us.

xlviii CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

(iii) THE NIZĀM SHĀHĪ KINGDOM OF AḤMAD-NAGAR (896-1004/1490-1595)

This House likewise attracted some Arabian scholars who dedicated their works to its rulers. Aḥmad-nagar also produced some learned men. Amongst them mention may be made of Mullā 'Abdu'n-Nabī who is the author of several works.

In this connection it should be noted that southern India, on account of its geographical position and of the literary zeal of its rival kingdoms, had great opportunity for attracting to itself scholars from Arabia, and just as the Mughal courts had attached to them many poets and scholars of Persia, so the courts of the Deccan kingdoms extended their patronage to the poets and scholars of Arabia.

KASHMĪR

It was Shāh Mirzā b. Tāhir of Khurāsān who introduced Islām into Kashmīr in the 14th century. He came to Kashmīr in 715/1315 and entered the service of the then ruling Hindū Prince. He soon became so popular and influential that he not only rose to the highest position in the state, but also got hold of the royal throne. His grandson Sultān Sikandar was one of the most powerful kings of Kashmīr. His son, Sultān Zaynu'l-Ābidīn (827-877/1423-1472) ruled the country gloriously for more than fifty years. He founded towns and built bridges and forts. He also enlarged and beautified the city of Srinagar, which was his capital. This country continued to be ruled by his descendants and successors until it was conquered by Akbar the Great, in 995/1586.

The first scholar and author of Kashmīr who is worthy of notice is Amīr Kabīr Sayyid ‘Alī (d. 786/1384), who, originally a resident of Hamadān, migrated to Kashmīr and settled there. He composed several works in Arabic, some of which have come down to us. His son, Sayyid Muḥammad was also an author. Amongst the authors next to them, mention may be made of Raḍī al-Dīn (d. 960/1553), Mullā Fīrūz (973/1565) and Muḥammad Ya‘qūb who is reported to have met Ibn Ḥajar and to have received from him permission to narrate Ḥadīth.¹ He wrote several works in Arabic, but unfortunately none of them seems to have come to us. His two pupils, Khwājah Zaynu’-d-Dīn ‘Alī and Mullā Shāngraf were also scholars and are also said to have met the above mentioned Ibn Ḥajar. Later on, this country produced many authors such as Mullā Amīn (1109/1697), Mullā Muḥammad Muḥsin (1119/1707) and Nūr Muḥammad Bābā (1195/1780). One Qāḍī Haydar Kashmīrī joined the army of Aurangzib who first appointed him a tutor to some of his sons and then a Qāḍī at Delhi. The emperor was so impressed by his scholarship and sense of justice that he conferred upon him the title of Qāḍī Khān.

THE MUGHAL DYNASTY: FIRST TWO EMPERORS (932-946/1525-1539)

Both Bābur and Humāyūn were patrons of learning. Many scholars, Indian as well as foreign, were attached to their courts. The Tabaqāt-i-Shāhjahānī contains a list of those saints and learned men who flourished in their times but so far as is known to the present author their Arabic works have become scarce.

THE AFGHĀN DYNASTY

(946-962/1525-1555)

Shīr Shāh Sūrī and his son Salīm Shāh both were interested in Islamic learning and education and patronized men of letters, amongst whom mention may be made of Shaykh Budh or Budhdhan of Bihār whom Shīr Shāh held in great esteem. He wrote a commentary on the Irshād fi'n-Naḥw of Shihābu'd-Dīn Daulat-ābādī. During Shīr Shāh's time, Nārnaul, a town in the Eastern Rājputānā, further rose into prominence as a seat of Islamic learning. Mention may be made of 'Abd Ullāh Sultānpūrī who was a favourite of Salīm Shāh. This scholar was afterwards attached to the Court of Humāyūn and then to that of Akbar. He received the title of Shaykhu'l-Islām and Makhdūmu'l-Mulk from Humāyūn. He was an author of some books.

THE MUGHAL DYNASTY (AGAIN)

(962-1275/1555-1857)

It may be observed here that the literary activities in Arabic increased in quality as well as quantity with each succeeding period of history. Thus under the Mughal dynasty which represents the last epoch of Muslim rule in this country we find a larger number of Arabic authors than under any other dynasty which had ruled India. Some of the authors of this period have acquired name and fame even outside India and their works are greatly appreciated in Arabia, Egypt and Turkey. Amongst such authors mention may be made here of Fayḍī, 'Abdu'l-Haqq of Delhi, 'Abdu'l-Hakīm of Siyālkot, Shāh Wālī Ullāh of Delhi, Ghulām 'Alī Azād of Bilgrām and Muḥibb Ullāh of Bihār.

After this general remark about the Mughal dynasty as a whole, we may take up the reigns of the important emperors of the House.

About Akbar there is a controversy as to whether he was literate or not ; there is no doubt, however, that he was ignorant of Arabic. Yet he was certainly one of the greatest patrons of learning in India, and a large number of scholars, well versed in various arts and sciences, were attached to his magnificent Court. The Ā'in-i-Akbarī, the Muntakhab at-Tawārikh and the Tabaqāt-i-Shāhjahānī all contain lists of the saints and learned men of his reign. Fayḍī, the poet laureate, had a wonderful mastery over the Arabic language, as is proved by his works, such as the Sawāṭir-u'l-Ilhām and Mawārid al-Kilām, written throughout without the use of dotted letters. Nūr Ullāh Shustarī was an eminent scholar of the Shī'ite school and the author of several works. During Akbar's reign Mīr Kalān, the traditionist, came to India from Herāt. Akbar put him in charge of the education of his son Salīm.

Jahāngīr, unlike his father, was well educated and also extended his patronage to scholars and learned men. The Iqbāl Nāmah and Tabaqāt-i-Shāhjahānī contain lists of the literati of his reign. Here special mention may be made of 'Abdu'l-Haqq of Delhi who is credited with having encouraged the study of Hadīth among Indian Muslims and of Shaykh Aḥmad Śarhindī who is rightly called mujaddid-i-alf-i-thānī as he infused a new life into the Muslims of the second millennium and successfully counteracted the heretic activities of Akbar the Great.

But Shāhjahān was even more learned than his father, besides being of a religious turn of mind. He therefore gave a great impetus and encouragement to orthodox learning, and many scholars and learned men flourished during his long and prosperous reign, of whom Maḥmūd Jaunpūrī, Nūr al-Ḥaqq, ‘Abd al-Ḥakīm Siyālkūtī, ‘Abd al-Rashīd, ‘Abd al-Bāqī and Muḥibb Ullāh of Allahābād are the most famous. All of them are authors of several books.

‘Ālamgīr was still a greater scholar and more pious and religious. He earnestly promoted the education of Muslims and the diffusion of Islamic learning throughout his empire.

Besides, he appointed a committee of learned theologians under the leadership of Shaykh Niẓām, to compose a compendium on the Ḥanafī Fiqh and spent an enormous amount of money on this enterprise. This work is the Fatāwā-i-‘Ālamgiri, better known outside India as al-Fatāwā al-Hindiyyah. Some of the scholars who flourished in his reign are Mullā Jiwan, Muḥibb Ullāh Bihārī, Mīr Zāhid, and Qutb al-Dīn Sīhālwi, all of whom have several works to their credit.

With the death of ‘Ālamgīr, the power and glory of the Mughal Empire began to decline. Bahādur Shāh was fond of the company of learned men, but Muḥammad Shāh indulged shamefully in debauchery and luxury, and the succeeding kings had no power. But it is curious to note that in spite of the rapid decay of the Mughal power after the death of 'Ālamgīr and notwithstanding the lack of peace and order in the country, this period produced a large number of eminent scholars, amongst whom we may mention specially, 'Abd al-Jalīl Bilgrāmī, Ghulām 'Alī Āzād, Sayyid Dildār 'Alī, Shī'ī Mujtahid, Salām Ullāh Muḥaddith, Shāh Walī Ullāh, Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz, 'Abd al-'Alī Baḥru'l-'ulūm, Faḍl Imām, Faḍl Haqq Khayrābādī, Turāb 'Alī, Muḥammad Ḥasan, Muhammad Mubīn, Thanā' Ullāh Pānīpatī, Ḥamd Ullāh, and Aḥmad 'Alī of Sandila.

Arabic authorship continued unabated in India even after the final fall of the Mughal Dynasty in 1857. Although, the present work is not concerned with the literary activities of the subsequent period, it will not be out of place here, if special mention be made of authors like 'Abdu'l-Hayy Firangī Maḥallī and Nawwāb Ṣiddīq Ḥasan of Bhopāl who have left a large number of Arabic works.

It may be pointed here that during the Mughal period also there arose several new seats of Islamic learning such as Siyālkot, Lucknow, Gūpāma'ū, Khayrābād, Rāmpūr, etc.

From all that has been said above about the literary activities of the Mughal period, it may be concluded that it was the golden age of Muslim India, also from the point of view of the development and importance of Arabic authorship.

In the end it may be noted that the East India Company also contributed a great deal to the cause of Muslim learning in India by the establishment of the famous Madrasah at Calcutta.

CHAPTER I

CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE DURING THE PRE-GHAZNAWID PERIOD

The most important contribution of India to Arabic literature undoubtedly begins with the Ghaznawid period, the tenth century A.D. ; but she also certainly made some contributions to Arabic, in respect of vocabulary and otherwise, from a much earlier period. However insignificant they may be, they deserve notice. But before enumerating them, some account may be given of the relations between India and Arabia during the pre-Ghaznawid period.

LEGENDARY RELATION

Legend speaks of relations between these two countries, before the dawn of history. In the Ḥadīth literature there are many traditions which refer to the legend that Adam, the father of mankind, being driven out of Paradise, alighted on the peak, called after him, of a mountain in Ceylon.¹ When his repentance was accepted by God, he was brought to 'Arafāt near Mecca where he met Eve who had been thrown down at Jiddah. These traditions are not only found in the religious literature of Islām but also in works of history and geography. For example, we find this legend in the works of Ibn Qutaybah (d. 276/889),

1. Ṭabarī, T'ārīkh, I, 119 and following pages and Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, Commentary on verse, I, 28.

2 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

Maqdisī (d. 375/985) and Yāqūt-al-Ḥamawī (d. 626/1228).¹

In the legend there is a controversy about the place of the death of Adam. According to one or two traditions he is said to have died in Ceylon.²

He is also said to have made many pilgrimages, not less than forty, to Mecca, going back to Ceylon every time.³

It is also asserted that the Black Stone of the Ka'bah, in the form of a brilliant ruby, fell from Paradise along with Adam and was carried to Mecca when he was ordered by God to build the Ka'bah.⁴

The story of Hābīl and Qābīl is said to have taken place in India according to one tradition.⁵

According to this legend, Arabia and India have had intercourse with each other from the very beginning of human life on the earth.

RELATIONS OF HISTORICAL TRUTH

Though political relations between India and Arabia were first established as late as the seventh century after Christ, yet these two countries, entirely different from each other in race and language, had been connected through trade from so early a time as the commencement of the seventh century before Christ, or perhaps even from pre-historic times.⁶

Two of the three routes by which trade was carried in ancient times between India and the West, passed through Arabia. The first route ran from the mouth of the Indus and up to the Euphrates, at the point where the road branches off to Antioch and the Levantine ports. This route attained high importance during the golden days of the Babylonian Empire, with the decay of which it fell into oblivion.

The second route, more important than the first, lay from the Indian coast to that of Yaman and Ḥaḍramawt and from there, passing along the Red Sea coast, to Syria and thence to Europe, either directly from the Syrian coast or via Egypt and Alexandria. This route was of great importance and the prosperity of south-west Arabia in ancient times was largely due to it, and it formed a highway of commercial traffic until the Ptolemies established an overland route from India to Alexandria.¹

This route, passing from Yaman to Syria through the Ḥijāz, has been referred to in the Qur'ān as Imām Mubīn (A Manifest Road).² This Imām Mubīn has been generally taken by the commentators to be the road passing from Yaman to Syria. Another Qur'ānic verse, referring to the commercial caravans of Sabā, throws some light on the prosperity of this route. This verse (xxxiv, 18) is as follows :

And We made continuous towns between them (the people of Sabā) and the towns which We had blessed—(the Syrian towns)—and

2. Qur'ān, xv, 79.

4 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

We apportioned the journey therein. Travel through them nights and days.

In this verse, the phrase Qurā Zāhirah has been explained by Ṭabarī to mean Qurā Mutawāṣilah (continuous towns), that is to say, towns lying close to one another.¹ In the Qur'ān there is another reference, though indirect, to this commerce carried by the Quraysh. In verse cvi, 1, لا يلاف قريش ايلانهم رحلة الشتاء والصيف the summer and winter journeys mean those made by the Quraysh on the highway called Imām Mubīn.²

It is certain that Ceylon was early known to the Arabs on account of its pearl fisheries and trade in precious stones, and Arab merchants had formed commercial establishments three centuries before the rise of Islām.³ When and how the Muslims reached the island is unknown. From Balādhurī it appears that some Muslim merchants had been there long before the attack on Sind by Muḥammad b. Qāsim. The cause of this attack has been stated by Balādhurī to have been vengeance for the plunder, by some pirates of Debul, of vessels which the ruler of Ceylon had despatched, filled with Muslim orphans.⁴

As to the political connection of India with Arabia, it is sufficient here to point out that the first invasion of the Indian coast by the Arabs was at so early a date as the reign of the second Caliph (13-23/634-644). But the Arab inroads did not penetrate far until 710 A.D., when Multan with the country of Sind fell before Muḥammad b. Qāsim during the reign of Walid (86-96/705-715).

CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

After the above account of the relations between India and Arabia before the Ghaznawid period, it will be easy to make a survey of the contribution of India to Arabic literature during this period.

(1) To begin with, the legend of Adam's alighting on the mountain of Sarandīp may be said to be, in a way, a contribution of India to Arabic literature. When Ceylon was for the first time visited by the Muslims, they, having heard the local traditions about the depression in the peak, might have remoulded them to suit their own faith.

(2) The commercial intercourse between these two countries introduced many Indian words into the Arabic language. The merchandise imported from India into Arabia consisted of perfumes, spices, cloths, etc. Arabs naturally borrowed words for these articles from Indian languages. Thus, words such as ṣandal, misk (musk), kāfūr (camphor), qaranful (cloves), filfil (pepper), hail (cardamom), zanjabil (ginger), jā'ifal (nutmeg), nārjil (cocoanut), mawz (banana), limūn (lemon), tanbūl (betel), etc., are Arabicised forms of the Indian words. In some cases the word Hindī was added to the words which already existed in Arabic, e.g., 'ūd Hindī, quṣṭ Hindī, tamr Hindī, etc. The last word has become 'tamarind' in English.

Indian cloths also used to go to Yaman and thence to the Hījāz. The Arabic words shās (muslin), shit

6 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

(calico) and fūṭah (striped cloth), come under this category.¹

Arabian navigation to the Indian coast induced half a dozen words of Indian origin into Arabic travels and geographical works, e.g., the word bārījah (plu. bawārij), meaning 'pirates', is the Arabicised form of the Indian word berā, and the word dawnij (plu. dawānij), meaning 'small boat', owes its origin to the Indian word dongī.²

Jurjī Zaydān, the well-known modern Arabic scholar of Egypt, says that the words ṣubḥ (dawn), ḍaw' (light) and bahā' (light), seem to be of Sanskrit origin, as these words are not found in the sister languages of Arabic.³

The word tūbā that occurs in the Qur'ān is said by some Arabic scholars to be the name of a paradise, in some Indian language.⁴

An Indian word was very much valued in Arabia; the Arabs called it muḥannad, Hindī and Hindawānī, which words frequently occur in Arabic literature. The very word Hindī has fascinated Arabs a good deal. They have used it as a lovely name for their women.

(3) Another debt which Arabic literature owes to

1. (i) Tāj al-'Arūs, under the word fūṭah (فوطه).

(ii) Muhammad Sulaymān, Arḍ al-Qur'ān (ارض القرآن), II, Chapter on Arabic Language.

2. For the word bārījah see Al-Bīrūnī, Kitāb al-Hind, p. 102 and the 'Ajā'ib al-Hind, ed. Paris, p. 114.

3. For the next word see Yāqūt al-Hamawī's Mu'jam al-Buldān, under the word ḡays, Vol. VII, (taken from Sayyid Muhammad Sulaymān's Arab-o-Hind ke Ta'alluqāt, p. 63, where the remaining four words are also mentioned).

4. Hus Adāb al-lughat al-'Arabīyyah, Vol. I, 41.

4. Qāmūs and Tāj al-'Arūs, under the word tūbā (طوبى).

India is the introduction of her numerals into Arabic, in which language they are still called al Ruq'um al-Hindiyyah. In Arabic writing letters only were used in place of numerals up to the eighth century A.D., when this Indian system passed to the Arabians, probably along with the astronomical tables, brought to Baghdād by an Indian ambassador in 773 A.D. The system was explained in Arabic in the early parts of the ninth century by the famous scholar Muḥammad b. Mūsā al-Khwārizmī and from that time it continued, though at first slowly, to be used throughout the Arabian world.¹ Al-Bīrūnī acknowledges that the Muslim system of numerals is derived from the best of their (the Hindus) systems.² It is a well-known fact that this system passed from the Arabians to the West, where these numerals were known as 'Arabic Numerals.'

(4) Another contribution of India to Arabic literature is astronomical material. Undoubtedly, the Arabs had their own science of astronomy, probably taken from the Chaldæans, but during the second century of the Hijra, when the Abbasid caliphate was at its zenith and when extraordinary efforts were made to translate foreign books into Arabic, we find much evidence of the influence of Indian culture on Arabian civilisation. Many books were translated from Sanskrit into Arabic. Of the astronomical works, the Sindhind was the first book to attract the attention of the Arabs. It was first translated by al-Fazārī (d. 154/770) and a second time by the already mentioned Muḥammad b.

(5) Another equally important contribution of India to Arabic literature is medicine.

Charaka and Susruta occupy the highest position as the medical authorities in the Sanskrit language.² Their works were rendered into Arabic at the close of the eighth century A.D., and quoted as authorities by the celebrated Abū Bakr al-Rāzī (d. 320/932).³ Ibn Nadīm gives not less than fifteen names of those Indian authors whose works had been translated into Arabic by the time of the composition of his Fihrist.⁴ None of these renderings are known to exist except a small book of Shānāq on poisons. The Berlin Library contains a MS. of it.⁵ The original text was, as stated in the preface of the work, first translated into Persian by Abū Hātim al-Balkhī for Khālid al-Barmakī in 200/815 and was afterwards rendered into Arabic by al-'Abbās b. Sa'īd al-Jawharī in 210/825. Hājji Khalīfah has also mentioned it under the title of the Kitāb al-Sumūm.⁶ The MS. is small and contains only 84 pages. It is divided into four sections (Maqālāt). The first maqālah is an introduction in which the author says how doctors have invented various compounds of deadly poisons to save the sacred lives of kings. To him, the usage of these poisons is not allowed for anybody except kings. The second chapter deals with the symptoms of the effects of various poisons. The third chapter describes various methods of preparing deadly poisons. For instance, he says that a baby swallow should be devoured by a poisonous snake; then both of them should be shut up in a copper kettle and buried under a cow-dung hill. After a certain number of days, when they are thoroughly decomposed and fermented, the mixture is to be dried up in the sun. A very small quantity of it is sure to kill any man who happens to eat it. The last chapter contains the remedies and antidotes. The author has also given a prescription of an antidote which renders any man that eats it poison-proof.

On the last page the scribe has written that at the instance of the Caliph, the device of bringing up a girl in such a way that whosoever happens to cohabit with her is sure to die at once, has been omitted on account of its being an act of barbarism. The work is of interest as showing the various methods of destroying human life in ancient times.

(6) Two story books, one the Kalilah wa Dimnah and the other the Alf laylah wa laylah, enjoy an unrivalled position in the domain of light literature. The former is an Indian story which was first translated from Persian into Arabic by Ibn al-Muqaffā in the eighth century A.D. The subject-matter of the latter was also, for the greater part, of Indian origin.¹ Ibn

Nadīm has given several names of story books translated from Sanskrit into Arabic.¹ All such books may be regarded as a part of the contribution of India to Arabic literature.

(7) The game of chess which plays no mean part in Arabic literature is also a contribution of India. "The best authorities agree that chess existed in India before it was known to have been played anywhere else. The word Shatranj is a foreign word among Persians and Arabians while its natural derivation from the Sanskrit word Chaturanga is obvious."² Many metaphors and similes have been taken from chess in both Arabic and Persian literatures.

(8) Al-Bīrūnī's *Kitāb al-Hind*³ and other similar works may be included in the list of the contributions of India to Arabic literature, not because the author is regarded by some Arabic writers of repute as a resident of Sind, but because the whole subject-matter of the works has been taken from India. The name of the author is so associated with India that we can hardly think of Arabic literature produced in that country without thinking of him. Whatever reputation he enjoys as a great scholar of astronomy and mathematics is due largely to the benefits he derived from the writings and works of Indian scholars. Apart from the patronage that he received from the first Sulṭān of Muslim India and his son, and apart from the facilities

3. It may be somewhat anachronistic to make mention of al-Bīrūnī's contribution to Arabic literature under the pre-Ghaznawid period, but as he is generally not included among the authors of India, a reference of a general type to him and his works could have been made in the present chapter only.

given to him by the Ghaznawids, it is impossible to ignore his great obligation to Indian scholars and teachers, at least as far as his knowledge of Indian sciences is concerned.

(9) Abū Ḥafṣ Rabī' b. Ṣubayḥ was what is called in the language of Islamic learning Ṭaba' Tābi'in (i.e., one of the companions of the companions of the Prophet's companions). He is, according to an authority, said to be the first Muslim to write a book.¹ He was a reliable transmitter of Ḥadīth. He migrated in his later days to Sind where he died in 160/776.² He is mentioned by Ghulām 'Alī Āzād, Raḥmān 'Alī and Nawwāb Ṣiddīq Ḥasan as the first Muslim scholar who lived in India.³

Sind was, during the first three centuries of the Hijra, an Arab colony where people of more than one tribe settled. These domiciled Arabs must have maintained Arabic as their mother tongue for a long time, and there must have sprung up many a poet among them. But it is a matter of great regret that no accounts whatever of such intellectual activities of Sindian Arabs and of those natives who must have learnt the language of their rulers, have come down to us. The Futūḥ al-Buldān and other similar books do not throw any light upon this matter. But it may be conjectured that some migrating Arabs must have written some books in Arabic. Hājji Khalīfah mentions the Tārīkh-i-Sind among the histories written by the Muslims, but does not give the name of its author.¹ Perhaps it was written by some Sindhī Arab. The author of the chāch Nāmāh says that he has taken the material for his book from an Arabic history written by the ancestor of the man who asked him to render it into Persian. Perhaps this Arabic history of Sind is the same as that to which Khalīfah refers. In the absence of any positive evidence and authority it is impossible to say anything definite.

Just as some Arabs settled in Sind, similarly many Sindians were domiciled in Arabia, either as slaves or free men. Of them also very little is known. Sam'ānī gives only two names under the Nisbah 'Sindhī': one is Abū Ma'shar and the other is the poet Abū 'Aṭā' Aṣḥa Sindhī.² The former was a Muḥaddith (traditionist) and was regarded as an authority on the history of the Prophet. The high position that he held as a scholar may be judged from this fact that when he died, the Caliph Hārūn al-Rashīd accompanied his funeral procession and led the prayers himself. Abū 'Aṭā' Aṣḥa will be spoken of at some length later on in connection with the contribution of India to Arabic poetry.

Sam'ānī also gives several names under the Nisbah Manṣūrī (of Mansūrah, Bhakkar), Daybulī (of Daybul, Thath), Lāhūrī and Hindī.³ All these men are said by

1 Khalīfah, I, 133

2 Sam'ānī, Kutāb al-Ansāb, p. 313-b.

N B — Jurjī Zaydān has given the name of another Sindhī poet Kūshājīm. He definitely says that he was an Indian by origin (vide his History of Arabic Literature, Vol II, 251). But this statement of his seems to be wrong, on the authority of Sam'ānī, who says that 'Sindhī' is both an adjective (al-ism al-mansūb) and a name and gives the names of Kūshājīm and Rajā al-Hindī, the traditionist, as examples of the latter case, (Sam'ānī, Ansāb, 314-a) 3 Ibid., 543, 236-b, 497 and 592.

Sam'ānī to be scholars and traditionists who transmitted Ḥadīth to others.

When Abu'l-Qāsim al-Maqdisī visited India during the latter part of the tenth century, he also found many traditionists in Sind. He specially makes mention of a certain Abū Muḥammad Maṣṣūrī who was a Muḥaddith and an author of several books.¹

Now all these Ḥadīth that the above mentioned Indians and those who settled in India transmitted to others, and their works on Ḥadīth may be taken as the first contribution of India to Arabic literature as far as science of Hādīth is concerned.

Abū 'Aṭā' Aflaḥ Sindhī, mentioned above along with Kuṣṣājim, the traditionist, was a Mawla (client) of Banū Asad and was a good poet, which may be judged from this fact that Abū Tammām Ḥabīb thought fit to quote three lines of his in the beginning of the first chapter of his Ḥamāsah.

The author of Kitāb al-Aghānī has devoted no less than five pages to him.² He was one of those poets who sang in the praise of the Umayyads. He flourished during the latter part of the Umayyad period and outlived his patrons to see the time of the first two Abbasid Caliphs. He died in the reign of Maṣṣūr. He tried to sing equally enthusiastically in the praise of his new masters, but they would not accept any poem from him after his having lavishly praised their past enemies. Aflaḥ was his name and Abū 'Aṭā' his kunya. There was something wrong with his tongue.

14 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

He could not pronounce such letters as Sh (ش), J (ج), etc. His poems were admired, but as his tongue was defective he could not recite them well. Once a certain Sulaymān was so pleased with him that he gave him a good-looking boy named 'Aṭā' to recite his poems for him. This boy proved of great help to him, and the poet was so satisfied with his services that he adopted him as a son and took his kunya from him. People used to enjoy the defect of his tongue, but he was very sensitive about it, and did not allow them to ask him to pronounce any particular word. The story of the device of Ḥammād, the famous narrator, by which he could succeed in making him pronounce some particular words, need not be mentioned here.

The poems of Abū 'Aṭā' Aḥḥ Sindhī may be taken as the contribution of India to Arabic poetry during the pre-Ghaznawid period.

CHAPTER II

COMMENTARIES ON THE QUR'ĀN

Commentaries on the Qur'ān occupy the first and most important place in Islamic literature, and a large number of Muslim scholars have always regarded it as their pious duty to write exegesis on their holy scriptures. The commentators may be arranged chronologically in the following way :

- (i) The Prophet, those Companions of his and those followers of theirs who verbally commented on Qur'ānic verses, but did not commit their comments to writing.
- (ii) Those earliest commentators who for the first time actually wrote something by way of commentary on the Qur'ān, transmitting the verbal comments of the Prophet and of his Companions.
- (iii) The commentators of the fourth and fifth centuries of the Muslim era, among whom the celebrated Ṭabarī stands unrivalled and unsurpassed. Their commentaries, just like the books on Ḥadīth, are full of the traditions and sayings, with the complete chain of the narrators.
- (iv) The commentators of the later period, who have omitted the chain of the narrators, except the final authority, whom they always mention without fail.

16 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

- (v) In the sixth century every commentator wrote his commentary from the particular standpoint in which he specialised. A grammarian, for example, wrote his commentary from a grammatical point of view, while a philosophical writer or a Ṣūfī took another view. Hence various sorts of commentaries were composed during this period. Among these commentators the great Zam^{kh}sharī occupies a high place. His commentary, entitled al-Kashshāf, is a scholarly work, composed from a grammatical and rhetorical standpoint, and is the foundation of the later commentaries as far as this aspect is concerned. Many super-commentaries have been written on this work.
- (vi) The commentators of subsequent centuries, who largely based their commentaries on the previous works of the same nature. Among these commentaries, two works, one known as Tafsir-i-Bayḍāwī and the other as Jalālayn, stand very high. The latter owes its fame to its marvellous brevity and conciseness, while the former is a good comprehensive commentary. The importance and value of this commentary may be judged from the fact that so many super-commentaries and glosses have been written on it by scholars of the succeeding ages that no other Qur'ānic commentary enjoys such a celebrity. We shall see later on that several Indian scholars have composed super-commentaries and glosses on it.

The commentaries produced in India belong to the sixth class. Of many Indian works on the Qur'ānic sciences, fifteen deserve notice :

(1) Commentaries of a general nature	3
(2) Commentaries written from various stand- points	4
(3) The principles of Qur'ānic exegesis	1
(4) Commentaries purely literary and pedantic		2
(5) Glosses and Annotations on previous works		3
(6) Concordances and Indexes	2
TOTAL		15

I. COMMENTARIES OF A GENERAL NATURE: THREE

(1) Tabṣīr al-Raḥmān wa Taysīr al-Mannān (تبصير الرحمن وتيسير المنان), better known as Tafsīr-i-Raḥmānī, by 'Alā'u'd-Dīn 'Alī b. Aḥmad Mahā'imī (d. 835/1431). He belonged to the tribe called Nawā'it who are said to be the descendants of those Arabs who fled for their lives from Madīnah to the Indian coast when Ḥajjāj b. Yūsuf sacked the city. 'Alī was an eminent scholar and the author of several works. He belonged to the Shāfi'ī school. This work has been published in two volumes at Ḥaydarābād.¹

This commentary is in the nature of what is called al-Sharḥ al-Mamzūj, just like the Jalālayn, but more comprehensive and of wider scope. It describes briefly all the Qur'ānic stories and the occasion of the revelation of the verses. It also points out the mutual con-

1. In the Berlin Library Catalogue, two MSS, Nos 925 and 931, are described as being composed by a certain Fāḍil-i-Hindī, while MS. No 870 is said to be the commentary by Alī under consideration. I have found out that all these MSS. are different parts of the same work, Tafsīr-i-Raḥmānī.

nections of the preceding and following verses.

There are two characteristics which the author has very ably maintained throughout: one is that in the beginning of each sūrah he briefly mentions the reason why the sūrah is so named; and the other is that he invariably paraphrases Bismillāh in each sūrah in accordance with the subject-matter of the sūrah. For instance, Bismillāh in the last sūrah is paraphrased in the following ways:

بسم الله المتجلى باسمائه وصفاته و أفعاله في الناس

(I begin in the name of God Who is manifest through His names, attributes and actions in regard to man.)

الرحمان بتكميله بعد افاضه نور الوجود عليه

(Who is so merciful as to make him perfect after shedding the light of existence upon him.)

الرحيم بحفضه من شر ما فيه و شر ما خرج عنه

(And Who is so compassionate as to protect him from the evil of what is in him and of what has gone out from him.)

The paraphrase of Bismillāh in the last sūrah but one runs as follows:

بسم الله المتجلى بكلماته في النور الفائق

(In the name of God Who is manifest through His perfections in the day-breaking light.)

الرحمن باشاعة ذالك المور

(Who is so merciful as to diffuse that light.)

الرحيم باعاذة من عاذبه من الشرور

(And Who is so compassionate as to give refuge to him who seeks refuge in Him from the evils.)

The word Allāh in Bismillāh is almost invariably followed by al-Mutajalli bi-Kamālātihī, which phrase is in turn followed by another, suitable for the subject-matter of the sūrah. The words al-Raḥmān and al-Raḥīm are each followed by a phrase consisting of the Ḥarf Jār Bā and its Majrūr. No other commentary has, so far as known to the present writer, followed this peculiar way of paraphrasing Bismillāh.

(2) *Al-Tafsir al-Muḥammadī*¹ (التفسير المحمدى), composed by Shaykh Muḥammad b. Aḥmad Miyānjī b. Naṣīr of Gujarāt. He was both a Sūfī and a scholar. He is said to have written glosses on the Tafsir-i-Bayḍāwī. He died in 982/1547. His object in writing this commentary was to point out the mutual connections of the Qur'ānic verses—which he asserts that no scholar had done before him. This commentary is not so comprehensive and valuable as the Tafsir-i-Raḥmānī, which he seems to have consulted when he wrote his own.

(3) Tafsir-i-Maḥzarī (تفسير مطهرى), composed by Qāḍī Thana' Ullāh Pānipatī (1225/1810) and named after Mīrzā Jān-i-Jānān, the spiritual leader of the author. The Qāḍī was a scholar of repute. Shāh 'Abdu'l-'Aziz Dihlawī (1239/1823) used to call him the Bayhaqī of India. His Mālā budd (a book in Persian on the Ḥanafī Fiqh) is well known in India. This commentary consists of seven volumes and is considered to be reliable, representing the orthodox view of the Ḥanafī school. Some parts of it have been lithographed in India.

1. I think this work is identical with an Arabic tafsir entitled Kāshī'u'l-Ḥaqā'iq wa Qāmūs-u'd-Ḍaḡā'iq (كاشف الحقائق وقاموس الدقائق) by Muḥammad b. Aḥmad Thāneswarī Gujarātī, mentioned in the Catalogue of the Arabic books and MSS in the library of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, compiled by Aghraī 'Alī (See A-a-20).

II. COMMENTARIES WRITTEN FROM VARIOUS POINTS OF VIEW : FOUR

(1) Shu'ūn al-Munazzalāt (شئون المنزلات) by 'Alī Muttaqī of Burhānpūr (975/1568), a very learned man who during the latter part of his life left for Mecca and settled down there. He is the author of several books, the best known and most useful being the Kanz al-'Ummāl. In this commentary the author has mentioned all the reliable and accepted occasions of the revelation of the Qur'ānic verses, together with grammatical, philological and rhetorical explanations of certain words and phrases, ascribed to some authorities on the subjects concerned. It does not deal with the text verse by verse, but with those verses only about which there are some reliable explanations and causes of revelation.

(2) Tarjamat al-Kutāb (ترجمه الكتاب) by Muḥibb Allāh Ilāhābādī (1058/1648). He was a descendant of the great Indian Ṣūfī Farīd Shākarganj whose lineage goes back to 'Umar, the second Caliph. He was both a scholar and a Ṣūfī. He expounded the ideas of Ibn 'Arabī so much so that in India he won the title of "the Ibn 'Arabī of India." He was a prolific writer and has left several works. He wrote this commentary on the Qur'ān which is also called al-Marātib al-Arba'ah. On this commentary he himself composed glosses also under the title of the Hāshiyat Tarjamati'l-Qur'ān (حاشیه ترجمه القرآن). He wrote this commentary entirely from a Ṣūfīistic standpoint, and chiefly from that of Waḥdatu'l-wujūd. Many points in his commentary are found to be deviating from orthodoxy. For instance, he has, like some other thinkers, inferred from the verses, x. 90 and 91 that Fir'awn embraced the faith of the Banū Isrā'īl at the time of his being drowned.

(3) Al-Tafsīrāt al-Aḥmadiyyah fī Bayān al-Āyāt al-Sharī'yyah (التفسيرات الاحمدية في بيان الآيات الشرعية), commonly known as Tafsir-i-Aḥmadī, by Aḥmad b. Abū Sa'īd, better known as Mullā Jīwan (d. 1130/1717). That he was a learned scholar may be seen from the fact that he was one of the teachers of Awrangzīb who had a high regard for his erudite learning. His other work is Nūr al-Anwār, a commentary on al-Manār which is a well-known text-book on Uṣūl al-Fiqh.

The work under consideration is not a commentary on the whole of the Qur'ān. It deals only with those verses from which commandments and prohibitions are inferred. He states in the preface that nobody had so far attempted to collect and comment upon those verses from which Aḥkām are deduced. In his boyhood he used to hear that al-Ghazālī had collected five hundred verses of this sort, but when he tried to obtain this work he came to know that what he had heard was wrong. Thereupon he resolved to do this work himself, and as he himself says, commenced it when he was a boy of sixteen years, completed it when he was twenty-one years old, and revised it six years later.

In the beginning he has given a list of all those *sūrah*s from which Aḥkām are derived, together with a list of the natures of these injunctions. Those *sūrah*s which contain no Āyāt al-Aḥkām are enumerated as being devoid of them (خالیه عن الاحکام). The first verse that he begins with is the twenty-seventh of the second sūrah which runs :

هو الذى خلق لكم ما فى الارض جميعاً

22 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

(It is He Who has created for you all that is on the earth.) From this verse he infers ان الا باحة اصل في الاشياء, i.e., lawfulness is a root principle in everything. In the last Juz' all the sūrah's from lxxxvii to the last are devoid of Āyāt al-Aḥkām, except sūrah No. 108, from which he proves the existence of the heavenly Ḥawḍ Kawthar.

(4) Fath al-Khabir bi-mā lā budd min ḥifẓihī fī 'ilm al-Tafsīr (فتح الخبير بما لا بد من حفظه في علم التفسير) by Shāh Walī Ullāh Dihlawī, who was the most celebrated traditionist and theologian of his age in India. He was born in 1114/1702, and at the age of fifteen, when he had completed his education on traditional lines, entered the Naqshbandī order under the leadership of his father, and two years later succeeded him in his office. In 1143/1730, he went to Mecca and then to Madīnah where he made the acquaintance of the scholars and traditionists of those places and received a sanad and a khirqah from the eminent Ṣūfī and Muḥaddith Abū Ṭāhir Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm at Madīnah. On his return to Delhi he devoted himself to literary and educational pursuits, and wrote a large number of works, dealing with Ḥadīth and other branches of Muslim theology. His reputation as a scholar is in no way confined to India. In the history of Islamic learning in India he stands unrivalled. His greatness lies in his being a scholar well versed in all branches of Islamic literature. He was a Ṣūfī too. Nawwāb Ṣiddīq Ḥasan is right when he says that if Walī Ullāh had lived in an early period, he would have been regarded as an Imām of his age. Being asked which of the four schools of Sunni Fiqh he belonged to, he said :—"I try my best to combine all the points of agreement in all the schools and in matters of variance I adhere to what is proved by the genuine Ḥadīth—which, thank God, I can do. If anybody asks me for a fatwā, I give it according to whatever school he wishes." He died in 1176/1762.

In the book under consideration he has collected all those Ḥadīth which offer some comments on verses of the Qur'ān. In the Itqān of Suyūṭī there is one chapter which contains only those Ḥadīth of this sort that have come down from 'Abd Allāh b. 'Abbās through the narration of Ibn 'Alī Ṭalḥah and Ḍaḥḥāk. The Fath al-Khabīr includes all those Ḥadīth concerned which are regarded as reliable by the authorities. This book is a fifth chapter of another work by the same author, entitled al-Fawzu 'l-Kabīr fī Uṣūl al-Tafsīr, which deals with the principles of the Qur'ānic commentary and will be discussed later on. The following is a specimen of the traditional commentary which the Fath al-Khabīr contains :

(Sūrah 112) قال المشركون صف لنا ربك فانزل الله قل هو الله احد

This commentary does not give the chain of narration, while the Itqān gives it invariably.

III. LITERARY AND PEDANTIC COMMENTARIES : TWO

(1) Sawāfi' al-Ilhām (سواطع الالهام) by Abu'l-Fayḍ Fayḍī (1004/1595), the poet-laureate of the court of Akbar. He was a Persian poet of repute and a scholar well versed in many branches of learning. The mastery that he had over Arabic literature is evidenced from two of his Arabic works, one is the Mawārid al-Kilām wa Silk Duraru'l-Hikam and the other is this work, under consideration, in both of which the author has very skilfully maintained throughout the figure of speech called Ṣan'at-i-Muhmalah.

It commences with a sort of introduction entitled Sawāṭi', divided into two parts, the first dealing with a short account of the author himself, and the other throwing some light on the Qur'ānic sciences, etc. Each part is subdivided into what is named Sāṭi'. All these 'flashes' are of different lengths, varying from one line to thirty lines or so.

The account of the author describes the place of his birth and how he entered the royal service of the king to whose eulogy he devotes two 'flashes'. He has written the longest 'flash' in the praise of his father. At the end of his introduction he has appended a poem in appreciation of his own work.

He has mentioned the names of his father and his brothers in an enigmatical way in order to avoid the dotted letters which they contain. These riddles are very difficult and far-fetched. A man who does not already know those names, can hardly solve them. Even with previous knowledge of the names, it is very difficult to work them out.

Out of nine riddles, six are mu'ammās and the remaining three are lughazes. The difference between the two terms is that for the former only one answer is correct, while in the case of the latter more than one solution is possible. The author has used the latter device for three names, Abu'l-Faḍl, Abu Fayḍ Fayḍī (i.e., himself) and Abu'l-Khayr and has described the signi-fiance of these names in words containing undotted letters. The descriptions are not limited in their reference and can be applied to other words of similar meaning also. But this is not the case with the remaining six, for they can only apply to the names concerned and cannot admit of more than one correct answer. I have been able to solve these six mu'ammās which are given below with their solutions:

(i) The name Mubārak contains five letters - م - ب - ك - ا - ر which are obtained respectively by اساس العلم (the base, i.e., the last letter of 'ilm), اصل الروع (the root, i.e., the last letter of qalb which is a synonym of raw'), مطلع الانعام (the rising place, i.e., the first letter of ilhām), رأس الرأس (the head, i.e., the first letter of ru'ūs) and امام الكرام (the leader, i.e., the first of kirām).

(ii) For Abū Barakāt he says :

والد عاد اصله اصل الروع مروم دور الاكر و مكرر امدا الدهر

The word wālid is given as a synonym of Abū. Next comes the word Barakāt. The letter ب is got from اصل الروع just as in the previous mu'ammā; ك is obtained by the phrase مروم دور الاكر (that is, the word اكر is to be reversed) and the last letter ت is obtained from مكرر امدا الدهر (that is, by doubling the value of the last letter of دهر, which is حرف الراء the numerical value of which is 200, and that of حرف التاء, 400).

(iii) The mu'ammā for Abū'l-Makārim is not difficult. وهو مدلول الوالد والمكارم معه, that is to say, it is a synonym of wālid followed by al-makārim.

(iv) The letters of the name, Abū Turāb, are obtained from the first letters of al-amal, al-raw' (i.e., al-bāl), al-walā', al-rūḥ, al-mukarrar, al-raw', al-awwal and al-marḥ

26 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

(i.e., al-baṭar). Here the dotted letter پ is obtained by the first letter of al-bāl which is a synonym of al-raw' and also by the first letter of al-baṭar which is a synonym of al-marḥ; and the dotted و is got by doubling the value of the first letter of al-rūḥ.

(v) The letters of the name, Abū Hāmid, are obtained by the middle letters of al-ḥal, al-ṭawd (i.e., al-jabal), al-ṭawl, al-ṣaḥw, al-raw' (i.e., al-bāl), al-samuw and al-ḥads.

(vi) The letters of the name, Abū Rāshid, are obtained by the last letters of al-'Aṭā, al-raw' (i.e., al-qalb), al-hudū, al-amr, al-rawā', al-ṭams, al-marsūm and amad al-dahr.

In the construction of these mu'ammās the following points are noticeable :

(a) The letters of the names are expressed by saying that they are the first, middle, or last letters of some particular word. In the case of undotted letters, there is no difficulty, because they occur in the new word presented ; but in the case of dotted letters, the author either gives a synonym of the word from which a particular letter has to be taken, for instance, Aṣl al-raw' is equal to Aṣl al-qalb, or hints at the numerical value of a letter ; for example, حرف التاء is obtained by doubling the value of حرف الراء.

(b) The author, in expressing the names of his relatives in this novel manner, has selected words that signify some excellence or virtue ; and the indication of the first, middle or last letters of words is given in various ways which themselves point to laudable characteristics.

(c) The names of Abū Turāb, Abū Hāmid and Abū Rāshid, the step-brothers of the author, are arranged in order according to their age, for it should be noted that the name of the first is to be taken from the first letters of the given words; that of the middle, from the middle letters, and that of the last, from the last letters.

Faydī was commonly considered to be a heretic as regards his religious faith, but curiously enough he has never said anything against the orthodox view in the introduction or in the commentary itself. If we, for instance, take the following four points on which a heretic or freethinker may differ from the orthodox :

- (1) The Qur'ān is the last book of revelation and Muḥammad is the last Prophet ;
- (2) Miracles and supernatural things such as the birth of Christ without a father, the story of 'The People of the Cave,' and that of 'The People of the Elephant,' etc. ;
- (3) God leads to the straight path whomsoever He likes, and lets go astray whomsoever He likes, etc. ;
- (4) The only true religion is Islām.

we find that he interprets all these points entirely from the orthodox standpoint.

This commentary, apart from the literary skill, has no value, as the self-imposed restriction has made the brief comments that he offers more difficult than the text itself. His chief point is to avoid the dotted letters while commenting on the Qur'ān and so he is unnecessarily lengthy wherever ideas could have been expressed concisely, otherwise he is brief to obscurity. It may be compared in brevity with the well-known Tafsir al-Jalālayn which has no such alphabetical restrictions and so offers its brief comments in the easiest possible words, while Sawāṭi' al-Iḥām has to use big and unusual words.

The learned Indian critic, Shibli, whom the late Professor Browne has quoted in his history of Persian Literature, remarks that this commentary shows only the wonderful mastery that the author had over Arabic literature, otherwise it is worth nothing.¹ Mawlawī 'Abd al-Ḥaqq, whose introduction to his Urdu commentary on the Qur'ān has been translated into English, is of the same opinion.²

As regards Arabic and Persian literature, it should be noted that the characteristics of an Indian mind are apt to express themselves in an artificial, flowery, bombastic and ornate style. To take Persian first, we find that Amir Khusraw, the greatest poet of India, wrote in a very artificial style, as exemplified by his Mathnawī, the Qirān al-Sa'dayn, and his prose work, the I'jāz-i-Khusrawī. Among the poets of the later period, Mullā Zuhūri, 'Abdu'l-Qādir Bidil, etc., are notorious for the same failing. The great poet of Persia, 'Urfī, who lived in India during the latter part of his life, could not avoid this influence. The same is the case with Sā'ib. Both of them are much admired in India and Turkey, but are disliked in their own country. Their fellow-countrymen say that they were poetical geniuses but that their poetry was spoiled by their stay in India.¹

Arabic could not enjoy the same amount of popularity in India as Persian did. Yet Arabic could not remain unaffected by this tendency of the Indian mind. Among all the rhetorical devices, the figure of speech called Ṣan'at-i-Muhmalah, has fascinated the Indian Muslims very much on account of its very difficult nature. We find that even in Arabic some attempts have been made in this direction. One of them is this Sawāṭi' al-Ilhām. Another is mawārid al-kilām by the same author. Then there is another commentary on the sūrah Yūsuf. Muḥammad Siddīq of Lahore is said to have written a biography of the Prophet with the same restriction.

By writing the Sawāṭi', Fayḍī has contributed to Arabic literature a work entirely artificial in its nature according to the characteristic of an Indian mind. I know of no book outside India which has ever been written with such successful maintenance of this rhetorical device throughout.

(2) Jubb-Shaghab (جُب شَغَب), also named Fayḍ Ghayb (فيض غيب). The author is 'Abd al-Aḥad b. Imām 'Alī of Allahābād who is a very modern writer. This work is mentioned here to show further the peculiarity of an Indian taste.

The Jubb-Shaghab is a commentary on the last juz' of the Qur'ān. In this commentary the author has avoided undotted letters, that is to say, he has maintained the figure of speech called Ṣan'at-i-Manqūṭah which is just the opposite of the rhetoric contrivance maintained by Fayḍī in his Ṣawāṭi'.

The following passage relating to the first sūrah will show its style :

الحمد لله (يثنى ثنيه)

All praise is due to God (Who is praised by way of being praised),

رب العالمين (يعذى غذية)

The Lord of all the worlds (Who gives nourishment),

الرحمن الرحيم (يقصى فيض جيب)

Merciful and Compassionate (Who sends abundant favours),

The master of the Day of Judgment (when the sinful are punished and the pious rewarded).

Thee we worship (Keep my motive firm),

واياك نستعين (تغيشنى)

And of Thee we long help (Thou redressest me).

اهدنا الصراط المستقيم (فى غى بغى اجنى)

Lead us to the straight path (in the misguidance of sin. Give me salvation),

صراط الذين اعطيت عليهم (يشئت اشيشة)

The path of those whom Thou hast rewarded (with whom Thou has been pleased),

غير المغضوب عليهم (غضبت غضبة)

Not of those with whom Thou art angry (upon whom Thou hast thrown Thy wrath),

ولا الضالين (نقى بغى - خذنى بخفض غض)

Not of those who go astray (i.e., the exclusion of the sinful. Take me in fresh comfort).

As this style is entirely artificial and as it is very difficult to express ideas in words having no undotted letters, the explanation it offers is much more meagre and obscure than that offered by the Sawāṭi'. The object of the author is not to write a commentary but to make a display of his knowledge of the Arabic language, which he has, to his credit, done and perhaps successfully. To maintain Ṣan'at-i-Manqūṭah is much more difficult than to maintain the opposite Ṣan'at, and hence this commentary is a greater credit to the author of the Jubb-Shaghab than the Sawāṭi' is to Fayḍī. The latter is a commentary on the whole of the Qur'ān while the former relates to the last juz' only, but this fact does not throw any slur on the abilities of the author, as he has not made any selection of sūrahs to suit his purpose. If he had done so, it would have been concluded that he could not have maintained the style throughout. Perhaps he could not find time, or he perhaps soon realised the folly of wasting his intellectual activities. At the end he has given a poem of thirty couplets, maintaining therein the same restriction, which fact throws sufficient light on the command that he had over Arabic literature. The Jubb-Shaghab is a chronogrammatical name which gives the year 1307 A.H. as the date of its composition.

32 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

The very title is a difficult phrase. Its meanings can hardly be understood without reference on dictionaries. Jubb means a 'well'. But what is the meaning of the other word Shaghab? This word has several meanings, one of them being 'deviating from the way.' So the whole phrase means 'A well out of the way.' As this 'well,' i.e., the Commentary, is 'out of the way,' i.e., not in the usual style, it is named Jubb-Shaghab.

IV. ON THE PRINCIPLES OF QUR'ANIC EXEGESIS :

ONE BOOK

This work is al-Fawz al-Kabīr (الفوز الكبير) by Shāh Walī Ullāh Dihlawī, whom we have mentioned above. It was originally composed in Persian but was later on translated into Arabic by a certain resident of Madras. The name of the translator is not known. It is divided into five chapters, the last of which is a separate book with the title of Fath al-Khabīr, which has already been discussed. The value of this book lies in its masterly exposition of the principles of Qur'ānic exegesis.

The author divides the subject-matter of the Qur'ān into five, to wit :

- (1) Al-Aḥkām (Commands);
- (2) Mukhāṣamah (Contentions);
- (3) Al-Tadhkīr bi-Aḥkām Allāh (Admonitions with reference to Divine blessings and gifts);
- (4) Al-Tadhkīr bi-Ayyām Allāh (Admonitions with reference to the days of God, i.e., past events);

- (5) Al-Tadhkir bi'l-Mawt wa ba'd al-Mawt (Admonitions with reference to death and the life to come).

The Qur'ān contends with four classes of people, namely, polytheists, hypocrites, Jews and Christians. After classing the subject-matter of the Qur'ān and the people with whom it contends, the first principle that the author lays down for the guidance of a commentator is that he should not lose sight of this fact that the Qur'ān, in dealing with all the matters mentioned above, strictly follows the style of the speech of the ancient Arabs and not of the later writers, who were experts in writing systematised and well-arranged text books.

The next point that he tries to bring home to his reader is the realisation that the object of the Qur'ānic passages containing al-Tadhkir bi-Aḥkām Allāh, etc., is to purify human beings and not to give them philosophical or historical lectures. The Qur'ān has mentioned only those facts which are self-evident and those stories which are well known.

Generally commentators are inclined to believe that there is some occasion or other of the revelation of all the Qur'ānic verses, and they try to explain the verses in the light of the stories which caused their revelation. Walī Ullāh is opposed to this general belief. He says that since the object of the revelation of the Qur'ān is to purify and elevate humanity and to correct wrong beliefs and evil doings, the very existence of the former (wrong belief) is the cause of the revelation of the contending verses and that of the latter (evil doings) is the cause of the revelation of the verses containing commands and prohibitions.

In the second chapter he says that the Qur'an was revealed in plain and simple Arabic, easily and thoroughly understood by those Arabs who heard or read it. Since thinking over the Āyāt Mutashābihāt was discouraged by the Prophet, they did not ask him for the philosophical explanation to those verses. When non-Arabs embraced Islām, difficulties of the following kinds arose :

1. Obscurity of certain words ;
2. Want of knowledge as regards the cancelling and cancelled verses ;
3. Want of knowledge as regards the cause of the revelation of some verses ;
4. Grammatical and rhetorical difficulties.

As regards the obscure words occurring in the Qur'ān, he says that the meanings of such words have come down to us on the authority of 'Abd Allāh b. 'Abbās through many transmitters, which meanings he has collected in a separate book entitled Fath al-Khabir, which may be taken as a fifth chapter to the present work of his.

As to the cancelled verses, he points out that the early writers used the word Naskh in a very broad sense, with the result that the number of such verses was to them not less than five hundred. Suyūfī, on the authority of Ibn al-'Arabī, has reduced the number to twenty, which Shāh Walī Ullāh brings down further to five only.

As regards the occasions of the revelation of the verses, he asserts that there is again a variance of interpretation concerning the term Sabab al-Nuzūl. Every event to which a certain verse might be applicable and which occurred in the time of the Prophet, has been rather carelessly mentioned as the occasion of the revelation of that verse. Nazalat al-āyah fi hādha, the common expression of the early writers, says he, does not therefore necessarily mean that that event was the cause of the revelation of the verse.

As to the grammatical and rhetorical difficulties, he has given a long list explaining therein all such difficulties.

In the third chapter he has explained the peculiarities of the Qur'ānic style. His main point is that the text is not systematically arranged like a regular book. He compares the sūrahs to the orders and mandates which a ruler issues to his subjects from time to time, as required by the situation. He has skilfully worked out his comparison in some details which is almost a new idea.

In the fourth chapter he gives a general criticism of all the existing Qur'ānic commentaries. His main point is that different commentators have taken a fancy to write commentaries from the different standpoints of their own interests. A grammarian, for example, has written his commentary from a grammatical point of view, while a philosophical writer has based his work on scholastic arguments. This tendency, he says, has done great harm to the understanding of the real spirit of the Qur'ān, just as the 'Ilm al-Tajwīd (the science of recitation) has diverted the attention of the readers of the Qur'ān from thinking over the actual significance of the verses towards the way in which it should be properly recited.

V. GLOSSES AND ANNOTATIONS ON THE PREVIOUS COMMENTARIES: THREE BOOKS

(1) The importance of the Tafsīr a Bayḍāwī has already been referred to. The most widely read of all the glosses, written by Indians on this commentary, are those composed by 'Abd al-Hakīm al-Siyālkūtī (1067/1656), who was an accomplished and eminent scholar attached to the court of Shāh-Jahān. His reputation as a learned commentator and writer of glosses spread during his lifetime so far as to reach Hājji Khalīfah, living at so distant a place as Constantinople, who has mentioned some of his works in his bibliography.¹ They were contemporaries of one another. As the most important part of the Bayḍāwī is that relating to the first two sūrahs, 'Abd al-Hakīm has written his glosses on this portion only, but did not finish the work. It runs up to the three-quarters of the second juz'. His glosses are very illuminating. The author of the Khulāṣat al-Āthār speaks of him and his works very highly. Of his Hāshiyah on the Bayḍāwī, he says رأيتمها وطالعت فيها ابحاثا دقيقة.²

The following are some of the characteristics of his Hāshiyah:

1. He offers philological and grammatical ex-

1. Khalīfah, IV, 925, VI, 241, and VII, 914.

2. Muḥibbī (محبی), II, 318.

planatory notes on difficult words and phrases in the Bayḍāwī ;

2. He explains obscure passages ;
3. He examines the Ḥadīth mentioned by Bayḍāwī and mentions the sources of them if omitted by Bayḍāwī and gives the full text of those Ḥadīth to which the original commentator has only referred summarily.
4. Another important characteristic of these glosses is that Siyālkūtī, being a Ḥanafī, defends all the arguments of his school against Bayḍāwī who is a Shāfi'ī.

(2) Al-Kamālayn Ḥāshiyat al-Jalālayn (الكمالين حاشية الجلالين) by Salām Allāh (1229/1813). He was a descendant of 'Abd al-Haqq Haqqī, the well-known Muḥaddith of Delhi. He himself was a Muḥaddith and the author of several works. His glosses on the Jalālayn are as brief as the text itself and are much appreciated in India.

(3) Al-Hilālayn Ḥāshiyat al-Jalālayn (الهلالين حاشية الجلالين) by Turāb 'Alī (1281/1864) who was the author of many books. His glosses are not mere ḥāshiyah. They are in the nature of Sharḥ Mamzūj and so more comprehensive and more copious than the Kamālayn, with this difference, that the latter deals with the whole of the Qur'ān while the Hilālayn is confined to the last juz'. Had it been completed, it would have been of far greater use.

Being a country where Arabic was never spoken, India has naturally produced much literature by way of Ḥawāshi and Shurūḥ to enable her children to understand thoroughly the standard Arabic text-books. That marginal notes and glosses written in India are very useful and of great help may be judged from the fact that Professor Margoliouth, in his preface to his Charestomathia Baidiwiana, while describing the glosses of the Lucknow edition among the three glosses which he used for his work, remarks that "were the lithography of this edition somewhat clearer, it would be most useful for the student." This observation, though about one particular ḥāshiyah, may be safely applied to most of the glosses and annotations produced in India.

VI. CONCORDANCES AND INDEXES TO THE QUR'AN : TWO WORKS

The present Western elaborate form of index is very modern. But an index, in the wide sense in which a list of the contents of a book is also an index, has existed from ancient times. But an index to words is not very old. In the Islamic literature an index to words has been known since the Muslim scholars turned their attention to what is called 'Ilm Aṭrāf al-Ḥadīth' (the science of the beginnings and endings of Ḥadīth). The Aṭrāf al-Ṣaḥīḥayn by Ibn 'Abīd al-Dimishqī (401/1009) is probably the first work written in the nature of an index by a Muslim writer.

India has produced not less than two books as an index to the Qur'ān :

(1) *Hādīyah-i-Quṭb Shāhī*¹ (هادیه قطب شاهی), composed by Muḥammad 'Alī Karbalā'ī who dedicated it to Sulṭān

¹ Mr Storey has mentioned it as a Persian work in his Bibliography of Persian literature (see No 84), but it may be taken as a contribution to Arabic literature also, for the book is an index containing the Qur'anic words and nothing else.

'Abd Allah Qutb Shāh (1020-1083/1611-1672). This index is divided into two parts : in the first the verses are arranged according to their initial, and in the second according to their final letters. In both parts references are given to the juz' and ḥizb as well as to the sūrah.

(2) 'The most important work of this nature is the Nujūm al-Furqān (نجوم الفرقان) by Muṣṭafā b. Muḥammad Sa'īd who dedicated it to Awrangzīb. It is an index, not to the beginnings and endings of the verses but to each and every word in the Qur'ān. This index is almost as modern in its design and arrangement as another work of the same nature, and also of the same name, by Flügel.

BOTH THE NUJUMS COMPARED

Flügel has first arranged the words according to their roots, and then under one root has given all its natural various forms. Muṣṭafā has simply followed the arrangement of the words according to the letters they contain, irrespective of root or anything of that sort, and so Muṣṭafā's index is much more convenient in this respect than Flügel's, in which one cannot find the required word unless one knows the root of it. For philological purposes, Flügel's index is much more helpful than the other one. If both the arrangements are joined, there will be nothing to be desired or improved.

The other point of contrast is that Flügel has adopted the numbers of sūrahs and verses, whilst Muṣṭafā refers to juz' and rukū' instead, the former being in-

1. Mr. Storey has also mentioned it as a Persian work but it may be taken as an Arabic work for the same reason as given above, and also because the preface has been rendered into Arabic. The Madras edition of A.H. 1292 contains the Arabic version of the Persian introduction also.

40 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

licated in numerals and the latter being shown in Ḥurūf Abjad, which system is very defective and inconvenient. In short, Muṣṭafā's Nujūm was the best Qur'ānic index up to the time when Flügel composed his work, which, as fairness demands, should not be compared with the previous work, in view of the wonderful facilities of modern times.

CHAPTER III

HADITH LITERATURE IN INDIA

By the fifth century of the Hijra, the great collections of Ḥadīth literature dealing with the sayings and doings of the Prophet and of his Companions, had been completed. But on the basis of this material there was built up a separate department of study, with numerous branches—the science of Ḥadīth—and this has attracted the attention of the Muslim scholars of succeeding generations up to modern times, and the vast literature on Ḥadīth now forms a very important and considerable part of Islamic learning. What we are concerned with here is the contribution of India to this branch of Arabic literature. Considering her special disadvantages and geographical obstacles, it may be said that she has acquitted herself well.

One great disadvantage that India has had with regard to the collection of Ḥadīth is that, being very distant from the country where the Prophet was born, lived, and died, there were no Indians among the narrators and guarantors of Ḥadīth up to the time when the traditions were collected in various works. It was in Arabia, Persia and Khurāsān that all the canonical and other works on Ḥadīth were compiled. Only two or three out of thousands of these narrators were directly or indirectly connected with India. One is Abū Ḥafṣ b. Rabī' who was a Ṭaba' Ṭābi'in and a reliable narrator. He went to Sind and died there in 160/776.

42 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

According to one authority, he is said to have been the first Muslim who wrote a book. This work does not exist and the nature of it is not known. Possibly it was on Ḥadīth. Another is Abū Ma'shar, who was the client of Umm Mūsā. He was also a narrator. References have been made to both of them in Chapter I. Besides them there might have been a few more among the early Muslim Arabs who went to Sind when it was invaded and conquered by the Muslim forces, but nothing is definitely known about them.

Anyhow, in India many Arabic books relating to Ḥadīth literature have been written, of which twenty-two are worthy of notice. They may be classed in the following way :

1.	Commentaries on canonical and other books	6
2.	Rearrangements of previous collections ...	3
3.	Dictionary of Ḥadīth literature ...	1
4.	Arba'ūn (a collection of 40 Ḥadīth) ...	1

1. COMMENTARIES ON THE CANONICAL WORKS: SIX BOOKS

Though most of all the canonical and other works have been commented upon in India, here only six books, more valuable than the rest, are mentioned.

(1) Lam'āt al-Tanqīḥ 'alā Mishkāt al-Maṣābil (لمعات التنقيح على مشكاة المصابيح) by 'Abd al-Ḥaqq Dihlawī (1052/1642). He is one of the best known of Indian scholars. He was born in 908/1551; and visited the Hijāz in 996/1587. He was an eminent Muḥaddith of his age and is rightly honoured as having considerably promoted the studies of Ḥadīth in India. He is the author of several works. He states in his preface that when he was writing his commentary in Persian on the Mishkāt, he came across certain learned discussions and subtle points that did not deserve exposition in the Persian language. So he resolved to write an Arabic commentary also, but as he wrote in Arabic by preference, the Persian commentary remained unfinished and the other was completed. This commentary is very copious and valuable. It gives philological explanations, grammatical subtleties, problems of Fiqh, various chains of one and the same Ḥadīth, the principles of inference, the correct pronunciation of the names and titles of the narrators, etc. The chief aim of the author is to defend the system of the Ḥanafī school by means of Ḥadīth in doing which he has succeeded, so much so that, as he himself has remarked, Imām Shāfi'ī seems to be one of Aṣḥāb-al-rā' and Abū Hanīfah, one of Aṣḥāb al-Zawāhir. The introduction is interesting and forms a separate treatise by itself, in which the author has explained all the kinds of Ḥadīth. He says that any single Ḥadīth may be regarded from different stand-points. With regard to the subject-matter it is either a saying or an action; if it is the latter, then it is either Marfū' when it is traced back to the Prophet or Mawqūf when it goes back to a companion only, or a Maqṭū' when it does not go beyond a companion of a companion of the Prophet. From the standpoint of genuineness a Ḥadīth is either Ṣaḥīḥ, Ḥasan or Da'if. It is Mutawātir, if it has been narrated by a large number of guarantors in each generation, otherwise Aḥād which are, in their turn, either Mashhūr, 'Aziz or Gharīb. The value of this introduction may be seen in this fact that almost all the Indian editions of the Mishkāt have incorporated it as introduction.

(2) Glosses on the Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī (الحاشية على صحيح البخاري) by Abu'l-Ḥasan Sindhī (1138/1727). He was born in Thattah, a village in the Sind Province. After completing his education in India he went to Madīnah and settled there for the rest of his life, gaining there a considerable reputation as a learned scholar and commentator. He wrote glosses on all the six standard books of Ḥadīth, and composed other works also. Murādī has spoken of him and his works highly in his Silk al-Durar. The work under consideration has been mentioned by Hajjī Khalīfah. It gives useful explanatory notes on difficult words and phrases in the text. It also explains the headings of the chapters in the Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī.

(3) Al-Musawwā (المسوى), a commentary on the well-known Muwatṭā' of Imām Mālik, composed by Shāh Walī Ullāh Dīblawī, whom we have met in the preceding chapter. In this work each Ḥadīth is followed by a learned criticism and explanation dealing with different interpretations given by different scholars. The learned commentator has also arranged all the Ḥadīth of the Muwatṭā in a form convenient for reference and has mentioned both Shāfi'i and Ḥanafī Madhhabs in each chapter. He has also given Qur'ānic verses in support of the injunctions derived from the Ḥadīth of the Muwatṭā. Shāh Walī Ullāh also wrote a commentary on the same work in Persian, but it is not so copious as the Arabic one.

(4) Sharḥ Trājim Abwāb al-Bukhārī (شرح تراجم ابواب البخاری) by the same author. This small book contains illuminating annotations on the headings of the chapters in the Ṣaḥīḥ of al-Bukhārī. The material of the book is not original, but hitherto it had remained scattered in voluminous commentaries. The merit of the work lies in the fact that reliable and useful notes selected out of the vast and scattered materials have been collected in a brief form in one book. The author has also mentioned some of the principles underlying the headings of the Bukhārī; some of them may be given here to show their nature :

- (i) Sometimes al-Bukhārī puts as a heading a Ḥadīth Marfū' though it does not comply with his rules for deciding the trustworthiness of the narrators, and then in support of this Ḥadīth, he mentions another which conforms to his own standard of reliability.
- (ii) Sometimes he gives as a heading a certain problem which is inferred from a Naṣṣ.
- (iii) Sometimes he puts as a heading the Madhhab of previous scholars and then he narrates those Ḥadīth which justify this Madhhab. Sometimes the inference is not positive and so he will put as a heading the phrase Bāb man Qāla Kaḍhā (Chapter on those who hold this opinion).

- (iv) Sometimes he puts a controversial problem as a heading and then narrates all the conflicting Ḥadīth, to enable the Faqīh to decide in any way that he likes.
- (v) Sometimes he narrates many Ḥadīth, each connected with the heading under which it is put. Then he mentions another Ḥadīth, the subject-matter of which is supplementary to what is inferred from the heading. He begins such Ḥadīth with the word Bāb, which does not mean an altogether new chapter. It merely stands for such a word as Tanbīh or Fā'idah, used in the works of the authors of the later periods.
- (vi) Sometimes he uses the term Bāb in place of the Qawl al-Muḥaddithīn (the verdict of traditionists).
- (vii) Sometimes he mentions as a heading the Madhhab of Ba'd al-Nās (some people) or a Ḥadīth which is not reliable to him, and then he narrates a genuine Ḥadīth from which he infers against the Madhhab or the Ḥadīth quoted as the heading.

(5) Al-Muḥallā (المحلل), another commentary on the Muwaṭṭā, compiled by Salām Allāh (1129-1716) who has been mentioned in the preceding chapter. This work begins with an introduction in which the author deals with the technicalities of Ḥadīth and gives a biographical account of the Imām Mālik and a critical note on the Muwaṭṭā. The reason for compiling the commentary he himself states to be that as Zarqānī's commentary was not current in India, and as no Indian commentary existed, he felt the necessity of writing an exhaustive commentary on the Muwaṭṭā. It is rather curious that the author of the commentary under consideration makes no mention of Shāh Walī Ullāh's Musawwā which had been composed about thirty years before. Perhaps he had not seen it. The reason given by the author is a common one. Zarqānī has put forward the same excuse in the beginning of his well-known commentary.

The Muḥallā is a copious commentary. In addition to the explanations of difficult words and phrases, the author discusses problems of Fiqh as well. Shāh Walī Ullāh's Musawwā is much less copious but is better arranged.

(6) Al-Mawāhib al-Laṭifah (المواهب اللطيفة), a commentary on the Musnad of Abū Hanīfah, composed by Muḥammad 'Ābid Sindhī (d. 1257/1841). The author was born in a town of Sind. He completed his education at Zabīd and then went to Ṣan'ā', where the minister gave him his daughter in marriage. He afterwards went to Egypt as the ambassador of the Amīr and then, after some time, he returned to his native place in Sind with the intention of settling there. But zeal for learning induced him to go to Madīnah again, where he was appointed Ra'īs al-Ulamā' of the city.

48 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

He wrote several books, one of which is the present work. This is not the first book of its kind. Glosses and commentaries on Abū Ḥanīfah's Musnad had been composed by several authors among which 'Alī Qārī's is well-known. Muḥammad 'Ābid's commentary is based on the previous works, together with his own method of commenting. He has, for instance, mentioned all other Ḥadīth which support the Ḥadīth contained in this Musnad. He criticises all controversies on Fiqh in favour of the Ḥanafī school to which he himself belonged.

II. REARRANGEMENT OF THE PREVIOUS WORKS : THREE WORKS

(1) Mashāriq al-Anwār al-Nabawiyyah min Siḥāḥ al-Akhbār al-Muṣṭafawīyyah (مشارق الأنوار النبوية من صحيح الأخبار المستفوية) by Ḥasan b. Ḥasan Ṣaghānī Lāhūrī. One of his forefathers migrated from Ṣaghān to Lahore, where he was born in 577/1174. He received his education from his learned father. In 615/1218 he went to Baghdād. Two years later the Abbasid Caliph sent him as an ambassador to the court of Iltutmish at Delhi where he stayed for about seven years and went back to Baghdād in 624. He was again sent to India on the same mission and returned to Baghdād in 637/1239. He died in 650/1252. He was an eminent Muḥaddith and a philologist of repute. This work of his on Ḥadīth and the ʿUbbāb (a dictionary of the Arabic language) are regarded as works of high merits. He also wrote several books on other subjects.

In the present work he has rearranged those Ḥadīth which are found in either or both of the Ṣaḥīḥayn in an interesting manner according to their initial words, classified systematically. The book is divided into twelve Bābs, each Bāb being further divided into several Faṣls. A few headings may be mentioned to show the nature of the arrangement :

- Bāb* I. Those Ḥadīth which begin with the relative and interrogative pronoun Man (من).
- Bāb* II. Ḥadīth beginning with the article Inna (إِنَّ), subdivided into ten Faṣls according to various pronouns to which this article is prefixed, e.g., اِنَّكَ - اِنِّى - اِنَّه.
- Bāb* III. Ḥadīth beginning with the negative article Lā (لَا).
- Bāb* IV. Ḥadīth beginning with the article Idhā (إِذَا) Idh (إِذ).

Upon this work more than one commentary has been written.

(2) Kanz al-‘Ummāl fī Sunan al-Aqwāl wa’l-Af‘āl (كنز العمال فى سنن الاقوال والافعال) by ‘Alī Muttaqī of Burhānpūr. He was born at Burhānpūr in 885/1480. After completing his education and being admitted to the Chishtī Order, he went to the Hījāz where he settled for good. He died in 975/1567. He is the author of many works, the number of which is said to have exceeded a hundred. The celebrated Suyūṭī collected all the Ḥadīth of the Prophet, contained in the canonical and other collections of Ḥadīth in one book entitled Jam‘ al-Jawāmi‘, the sayings being arranged according to the initial words of Ḥadīth and the doings according to the names of the narrators. Of this huge work he later on made an abridgment under the title of al-Jāmi' al-Ṣaghīr in which he included only those sayings (not doings) which were short and unrepeatd.

'Alī Muttaqī rearranged all the Ḥadīth contained in Jam' al-Jawāmi' under different titles in accordance with the arrangement in works of Fiqh. First he arranged the Ḥadīth of the Jāmi' al-Ṣaghīr under the title of Manhāj al-'Ummāl fī Sunan al-Aqwāl, and then he arranged the rest of the Ḥadīth Qawli contained in the Jam' al-Jawāmi' giving it the name of Ikmāl Manhāj al-'Ummāl. Afterwards he put both collections in one book under the title of Ghāyāt al-'Ummāl. Later on he arranged the Ḥadīth Fi'li (the doings of the Prophet) contained in the Jam' al-Jawāmi' and named it Mustadrak al-Aqwāl. Finally, he combined all these three works under the title of Kanz al-'Ummāl, that is to say, the Kanz consists of the Ghāyāt al-'Ummāl, and the Mustadrak al-Aqwāl, the former in turn consisting of the Manhaj and Ikmāl.

The arrangement of the Kanz is this that the whole book is divided into sections, called books and arranged alphabetically. First he gives the Ghāyāt under the heading 'book' with various chapters, and then he gives the Mustadrak (i.e., Ḥadīth Fi'li). In the Ghāyāt, the Manhaj is followed by the Ikmāl after each chapter and not after each book. This work has been published at Haydarābād in eight volumes with a very convenient list of the contents. All the Ḥadīth are numbered. This work contains forty-six thousand one hundred and eighty Ḥadīth. The value of this work as a useful book of reference to Ḥadīth cannot be too much emphasised. Abu'l-Ḥasan al-Bakrī, the teacher of the author, used to say "Suyūṭī obliged the world by composing his Jam' al-Jawāmi', whilst 'Alī Muttaqī has obliged him by rearranging the same."

3. The Musnad of Imām A'ẓam (مسند امام اعظم), to which a reference has been made above. This Musnad was arranged according to the headings in treatises on Fiqh by Muḥammad 'Ābid of Sind, who has been already mentioned as the author of a commentary on this very work. Not less than fifteen Musnads have come down from Abū Ḥanīfah, of which the versions of Al-Ḥārithī and Ibn Kḥusraw are well known. Muḥammad 'Ābid has arranged those Ḥadīth which have come down from the Imām A'ẓam through Ṣadru'd-Dīn Mūsā al-Ḥiṣkafī (d. 650/1252).

III. DICTIONARY OF HADITH : ONE BOOK

It is the Majma' Biḥār al-Anwār fī Ḡharā'ib al-Tanzīl wa Laṭā'if al-Akḥbār (مجمع بحار الانوار في غرائب التanzil و لطائف الاخبار), composed by Muḥammad b. Ṭāhir of Pattan. He was born at Nahrwālah (now called Pattan) in Gujarāt in 914/1508. Having completed his education in India, he went to the Ḥijāz at the age of thirty, where he carried on his higher studies with the scholars of the place and became a disciple of 'Alī Muttaqī. Afterwards he returned to his own country where he zealously took up the cause of introducing religious reforms among his countrymen who were Ismā'īlites. For some time he was successful in his mission, but afterwards was killed by them. This work which the author dedicated to his spiritual leader, 'Alī Muttaqī, is a voluminous work consisting of 1668 pages of long size, closely lithographed. It is almost an exhaustive dictionary of both Ḥadīth and the Qur'ān. Words are arranged according to the order of the letters of their root. He invariably gives all those derivatives of one root which have been used in Ḥadīth together with the text of the Ḥadīth in which they occur. He not only gives the meanings of the words but also explains many doubtful points in Ḥadīth concerned. This work has almost eclipsed all the previous works of its kind.

IV. ARBA'UN (اربعون) : ONE BOOK

In compliance with a Ḥadīth, "He, who preserves for my followers forty Ḥadīth relating to their religion, will be resuscitated by God among theologians and I will intercede for him on the Day of Judgment", a large number of Arba'un have been compiled outside India. Of the few produced in India, one by Shāh Walī Allāh deserves notice. The peculiarity of this selection is that all the Ḥadīth contained in this book are reliable traditions that have come down by a regular chain of narrators from the Prophet, right down to the learned compiler, through his teacher Abū Tāhir Madanī, who relates them in his own turn from his father, and so on, which chain is completely mentioned in this work.

V. NEW COLLECTIONS MADE UPON A NOVEL PRINCIPLE : TWO WORKS

(1) Al-Durr al Ṭhamin fī Mubashsharāt al-Nabī al-Amin (الدراالامين في مبشرات النبی الامین) by Shāh Walī Allāh. It is also a collection of forty Ḥadīth, but received in dream from the Prophet. The author has divided them into three classes : (i) those which he himself received from the Prophet, (ii) those which he heard through one medium, and (iii) those which he received through the medium of more than one narrator. A few traditions may be given here to show the general nature of the Ḥadīth contained in this work.

One tradition runs :

“While I was engaged in Murāqabah in a mosque at Cambay I saw the holy spirit of the Prophet which covered me with a sheet with the result that some subtleties of the religious mysteries were revealed to me.”

Another is :

“I asked the Prophet in a dream about the Shī‘ah sect and he replied that it was Bāṭil (false).”

In a third dream he asks the Prophet which of the four schools of Fiqh is best. “All are equal” was the reply.

The other kinds of Ḥadīth which the author heard through one or more medium are those which were narrated to him by his father or his teacher.

These Ḥadīth cannot be put in the same category as other regular Ḥadīth. They may be called Ḥadīth in this sense that they are traced back to the Prophet ; but they are of no legal value, as having been received only in dreams.

(2) Al-Nawādir min al-Ḥadīth (النوادر من الحديث) by the same author. This work, though under the same category, is not of the same nature as the previous one. It is just like a Nawādir in any other branch of learning, e.g., literature, history, medicine, etc. In this work the author has shown his wit and humour by collecting Ḥadīth with some outstanding peculiarities. It is an interesting brief collection. A few Ḥadīth may be given here to indicate the sort of book it is :

(1) He has mentioned one Ḥadīth as being Musnadu'l-Jinn—a Ḥadīth which a Jinn heard from the Prophet. This Ḥadīth is the most reliable of all Ḥadīth. Even Western scholars will not doubt its genuineness, since the words actually occur in the text of the Qur'ān. The chain of this Musnadu'l-Jinn is very short, but at the same time most reliable to the Muslims. The chain of the narration is عن النبي عن الله تعالى عن الجن عن النبي and the text is قل اوحى الى انه استمع نفر من الجن قالوا انا سمعنا قرآنا عجباً يهدي الى ربك.

Here the first narrator, some Jinn, heard the Qur'ān from the Prophet. The Qur'ān is the text of the Ḥadīth, the Jinn is the first narrator, God, the second, and the Prophet, the last.

(2) Another Ḥadīth that he mentions is what is called الحديث المسلسل بالاوليه, that is to say, a Ḥadīth in which all the narrators, except the last few, say in their turn respectively : “It is the first Ḥadīth that I have heard from the previous guarantor.” It runs :

(3) الحديث المسلسل بالفقهاء i.e., a Ḥadīth in which all the narrators are Faqīhs.

(4) A Ḥadīth in which all the guarantors are Ṣūfīs.

(5) A Ḥadīth in which all the narrators are Moorish.

(6) A Ḥadīth in which all the transmitters are of one and the same name, Aḥmad.

(7) A Ḥadīth, the names of whose narrators begin with the letter 'Ayn (ع).

This book is interesting, not from the standpoint of utility, but rather in view of the individual, curious peculiarities of some Ḥadīth.

VI COLLECTIONS OF HADITH ABOUT SOME PARTICULAR TOPICS OR PROBLEMS : THREE BOOKS

(1) Talkhīs al-Bayān fī 'Alāmāt Mahdī Ākhir al-Zamān (تألیف فی ایمان فی علامات مهدی آخر الزمان) by 'Alī Muttaqī whom we have known in the preceding pages. This book, as the title indicates, is a collection of Ḥadīth about the expected Mahdī. It was intended for the guidance of the followers of Muḥammad of Jawnpūr (d. 910/1504), who claimed to be the expected Mahdī. The work is not an original one. The author states that as the 'Irf al-Ward of Suyūṭī was not systematically arranged and divided into chapters, he has rearranged it. He also added new material which he collected from other books. It consists of an introduction and thirteen chapters. In the introduction he declares that Muḥammad of Jawnpūr was not the Mahdī. He, however, seems to regard him as a saint, but he points out at the same time that it sometimes happens that even a saint makes mistakes and blunders. Only the Prophets were infallible. These are the headings under which he has arranged those Ḥadīth :

1. The miracles of the Mahdī.
2. His lineage.

56 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

3. His physical features.
4. The circumstances before his appearance.
5. His signs.
6. The way in which allegiance will be paid to him.
7. His helpers.
8. His conquest.
9. His meeting with Christ.
10. The duration of his stay.
11. His death.
12. A mention of those who have called themselves Mahdī.
13. The Fatwā of the theologians of Makkah and Madīnah.

(2) Mā Thabat bi'l-Sunnah fī Ayyām al-Sanah (ما ثبت بالسنة في أيام السنة), i.e., what is proved by the Ḥadīth with regard to the days of the year, by the great Muḥaddith of Delhi, 'Abdu'l-Iḥjaqq. This work is the first of its kind, as far as known to me. It contains all those Ḥadīth which relate to the months of the year. He begins with the month of Muḥarram and quotes all the reliable Ḥadīth concerning the first ten days of this month. He rejects all those practices which are superstitious and not based on Ḥadīth. He declares that such beliefs as this, that he who applies antimony to his eyes on the tenth of Muḥarram, will never suffer from inflammation of the eyes, or that he who takes a bath on the tenth of Muḥarram will fall ill, are mere superstitions and have no connection with religion.

Then he takes a critical survey of all the Ḥadīth about the martyrdom of Ḥusayn, followed by an account of the relations between Ibn Zubayr and Mu'āwiyah.

Under the heading of the month Ṣafar, he proves the absurdity of the common belief in the inauspiciousness of this month.

Under the heading of the month Rabi' II, he gives a short account of 'Abd al-Qādir Jilānī whose death is celebrated by Muslims on the 11th of this month.

Then he discusses Ḥadīth relating to Rajab and the merits and demerits of Laylat al-Raghā'ib (the night of desires) which is the night preceding the first Friday of this month.

Similarly, with regard to Sha'bān, Ramaḍān, Shawwāl and Dhu'l-Ḥijjah, he narrates Ḥadīth relating to the middle nights of Sha'bān and Ramaḍān, Tarāwīḥ, 'Id al-Fiṭr, 'Id al-Adḥa and pilgrimage. He does not say anything about the month of Dhu'l-Qa'dah, perhaps because he could not find any Ḥadīth referring to it.

(3) Taḥqīq al-Ishārah Ilā Ta'mīm al-Bishārah bi'l-Jannah (تحقيق الاشارة الى تعميم البشارة بالجنة) by the same writer. In this book the author has collected all those Ḥadīth which contain a Bishārah (good tidings) relating to the entry into Paradise of any companion of the Prophet. At the end, he gives many Ḥadīth relating to the merits and excellences of the members of the Prophet's family. He has collected all these Ḥadīth from the Jāmi al-Uṣūl of Ibn al-Aṭhīr and the Kanz al-'Ummāl of 'Alī Muttaqī.

VII. THE SECRETS OF HADITH : ONE WORK

It is the Ḥujjat Allāh al-Bālighah, composed by the great Shāh Walī Allāh. The chief characteristic of this book lies in the rational and critical exposition of Ḥadīth. Of course, the words 'rational' and 'critical' are not to be taken in the sense as that in which Western scholars use them. One cannot reasonably expect a staunch follower of any religion to criticise the scripture he believes in, in the same way as a man of another religion will do. Still the author deserves some credit for having tried to rationalise his religious dogmas, and consequently the work under consideration has won him the title of the Ghazālī of India. In India it is regarded as being superior to the well-known book Iḥyā al-'Ulūm, which contains many unauthentic Ḥadīth.

In the beginning of the book the author says that the basis of all Islamic learning is 'Ilm al-Ḥadīth' dealing with the sayings and doings of the very founder of Islam. This science has many branches, of which 'Ilm al-Asrār' (the science of the secrets of Ḥadīth) is the most important. He who possesses it, is not like that man who, being advised to eat an apple by his medical adviser, ate colocynth (Ḥinḏal), on account of the resemblance that exists between the two fruits.

The underlying principles of this work is that every religious injunction of Islām is rational and justifiable from the standpoint of utility, but at the same time, says he, when a Ḥadīth has been proved to be authentic and genuine, a man's conduct in acting accordingly should not be dependent upon his knowing the utility of the injunction conveyed by the Ḥadīth, because every mind cannot understand everything, and so, says he, we should trust the Prophet rather than our minds.

In order to explain a number of Ḥadīth which, he thinks, cannot be explained otherwise, he has maintained the existence of a third world, called 'Ālam Mithāl', which lies between the material and spiritual world. Everything that exists in this world is said to have a corresponding existence in this intervening world of Mithāl.

This book has, in the first place, been divided into two main divisions. The first division which deals with the general principles of inferring the utility of the religious commands and prohibitions, is again divided into seven discussions, each being further split into several chapters. The second main division deals with the rational explanations of all the religious injunctions arranged according to order in works on Fiqh.

As this book is considered to be also a work on scholastic theology, it will be discussed further in that connection.

VIII. THE SCIENCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF HADITH : ONE BOOK

It is Al-Fayḍ al-Nabawī fī Uṣūl al-Ḥadīth wa Fahāris al-Bukhārī (الفيض النبوي في أصول الحديث و فهارس البخاري), composed by 'Umar b. Muḥammad 'Ārif al-Nahrwālah (Pattani). Nothing is known of the author except that he was a resident of Pattan.

This book consists of an introduction, in which the author explains technicalities of Ḥadīth, and four chapters, in which he dwells upon the various kinds of Ḥadīth, rules for deciding the truthfulness of the guarantors, and conditions for receiving and transmitting

60 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

Ḥadīth. Then follow various other discussions, concluding with a critical note on Bukhārī and his work, a survey of all the chapters of the Ṣaḥīḥ al-Būkhārī with regard to the number of the Ḥadīth they contain, an alphabetical list of the guarantors and a copious commentary on the first two books (chapters) of the Ṣaḥīḥ al-Būkhārī.¹

IX. THE BIOGRAPHIES OF THE HADITH NARRATORS: TWO WORKS

(1) Darr al-Ṣaḥābah fī Bayān Muwāḍi' Wafayāt al-Ṣaḥābah (در الصحابه في بيان مواضع وفيات الصحابه) composed by Ḥasan Ṣaghānī, whom we have known as the author of the Mashāriq al-Anwār. It is a small treatise and deals with the places in which about eight hundred companions of the Prophet died. The names are arranged alphabetically.

(2) Kitāb Asmā' Rijāl Mishkāt al-Maṣābiḥ (کتاب اسماء رجال مشکوٰۃ المصابيح) by 'Abdu'l-Ḥaqq Ḥaqqī of Delhi. It deals with all the guarantors of the Ḥadīth contained in the Mishkāt. The author begins with comparatively long accounts of the four rightly directed Caliphs and then, after the accounts of the members of the Prophet's family, follow the biographical notices of all the remaining narrators alphabetically arranged.

X. FORGED HADITH: TWO BOOKS

(1) Al-Risālah fī al-Mawḍū'āt min al-Ḥadīth (الرساله في الموضوعات من الحديث) by Ḥasan Ṣaghānī. It contains those Ḥadīth which the author regards as being forged (موضوع).

1. See Loth, No. 131,

(2) Risālat al-Mawqū'āt (رسالة الموضوعات) by Muḥammad b. Ṭāhir, the author of the dictionary of Ḥadīth already referred to.

The book begins with an introduction in which the author warns his readers that a Ḥadīth should not be taken to be forged merely because it has been said by some one to be so, unless authorities are consulted. The Mawqū'āt of Ibn Jawzī, says he, for instance, contains many Ḥadīth such as are Ḥasan, not to speak of Ḍa'īf. Then follows criticism on the merits and demerits of those Ḥadīth which are said to be Mawqū' by one scholar or another. It is a useful work on the subject.

CHAPTER IV

LITERATURE ON FIQH

As far as the Ḥadīth literature is concerned, there is little or no variance among the Sunnīs, who have, in all times, formed an overwhelming majority of the Muslim population. It is Fiqh which has divided them into four schools. The majority of Indian Muslims have always been Ḥanafīs, that is, the followers of the Imām Abū Ḥanīfah. By the time the Indian Muslims commenced to take part in the composition and compilation of works in Arabic, so much literature had been produced on the subject of Fiqh, whether Ḥanafī or of other schools, that no further efforts were made to produce works on original lines and writers confined themselves almost entirely to the production of commentaries, glosses and new compendiums. Hence India's contribution to Arabic literature on Fiqh is nothing more than the construction of new edifices in imitation of the old ones, and out of the same materials, with a very slight change in the design. Moreover, I am not aware that, since the composition of the standard work on Fiqh, any other countries have been able to produce books of any original character upon this subject, in spite of the greater opportunities they have had for making contributions to Arabic literature.

Of all the numerous works relating to Fiqh, produced in India, eighteen deserve notice. They may be classified as follows :

1. Critical Account of Fiqh	2
2. The Principles of Fiqh :
(a) Text Books	1
(b) Commentaries on Standard Works	3
3. Fiqh (proper) :
(a) Ḥanafī School :
(i) Fatāwā	5
(ii) Various Topics	6
(b) Shāfi'ī School	1

I. CRITICAL ACCOUNT OF FIQH : TWO WORKS

(1) Al-Inṣāf fī Bayān Sabab al-Ikhtilāf (الانصاف في بيان سبب الاختلاف). This is a work by Shāh Walī Allāh of Delhi, whom we have known in the preceding chapters, and is a critical account of the theological differences among the Sunnīs. The author has ably traced out the history of those differences.

Fiqh, says he, did not exist in the time of the Prophet, nor were theoretical problems introduced in that period. The Prophet did a certain thing and his companions watched him doing it ; this was sufficient for their guidance. The people did not put to him more than thirteen questions, which are mentioned in the Qur'ān.

All the companions of the Prophet were not always with him ; hence there was a good deal of difference in their personal knowledge of his sayings and doings. It was a common practice among the companions to enquire from one another if any practical problem arose, of which they themselves did not know the solution. The companions of the Prophet settled down later on in different places. When they were asked by the next generation to give a solution of any new problems, they naturally said in reply what they knew. This is one of the causes that led to the differences existing in Fiqh.

The second cause that he mentions is the different interpretations of the Prophet's sayings and doings. A bad memory is also given as one of the causes. Then the author traces the history of two different schools of Fiqh: one at Madīnah, where the Fatāwā of the first three Caliphs were current, and the other at Kūfah where the Fatāwā of 'Alī and 'Abd Allāh b. Masūd had supremacy.

(2) 'Iqdal-Jidfi Ahkām al-Ijtihād wa'l-Taqlid (عقد الجدي في احكام الاجتهاد والتقليد) by the same author. It is an interesting book full of useful information, discussed in a critical manner. It is divided into five chapters. In the first chapter he discusses the four bases of Ijtihād: the Qur'ān, Sunnah (the Prophet's sayings and doings), Ijmā' (consensus) and Qiyās (analogy). In the second chapter he gives an account of the differences among the Mujtahids and Faqīhs. In the third chapter he emphasises the importance of adherence to one of the four schools and warns the reader against the contrary practice. In the fourth chapter he described various classes of people from the point of view of their capacity for theological inference. He has divided them into four classes :

- (1) Founder of schools ;
- (2) Jurists having a capacity for independent judgment within the limits of a school founded by some greater scholar ;
- (3) Theologians well versed in theology but not capable of giving independent judgments ;
- (4) Mere followers who entirely depend upon the guidance of theologians and learned men.

In the fifth chapter he warns the reader against the misuse of Taqlid and says that a follower of any particular school must not look down upon other systems or attach too much importance to his own Imām.

The value of such a clear exposition of the problem of Taqlid as this book offers, may be realised when it is seen that the author, Shāh Walī Allāh, is equally held in high honour and respect by those Indians who are Muqallidūn and by those who follow the doctrine of Ahl al-Hadīth, represented by the party of the late editor of the monthly periodical al-Manār in Egypt, and by the followers of Nawwāb Ṣiddīq Ḥasan Khān in India.

II. THE PRINCIPLES OF FIQH : ONE BOOK

(a) Text-Book

On this subject in India there has been composed a book, which, like many famous text-books, has served as the basis for a long series of commentaries. It is entitled Musallam al-Thubūt (مسلم الثبوت), composed by the great Indian philosophical writer, Muḥibb Allāh Bihārī, whose fame has secured him admittance into the Encyclopaedia of Islām under the word 'Bihārī'. He was born at Karah, a village in Bihār. He received his education from distinguished scholars such as Quṭb al-Dīn Shamsābādī and others, and became one of the most eminent scholars of his age. He paid a visit to Awrangzīb when the latter was in the Deccan. The Emperor appointed him Qādī of Lucknow. He died in 1119/1707. He is the author of several works of which the present book on Uṣūl al-Fiqh and another entitled the Sullam, on logic, hold a high rank in the Indian curriculum.

The Musallam al-Thubūt was, as indicated by its very chronogrammatical name, written in 1109/1697. This book is nothing more than a mere reproduction of the previous material, but arranged in so scholarly a manner that it has ever since occupied an honoured place as a text-book in the Indian curriculum of Uṣūl al-Fiqh. Several Indian scholars, including the eminent man of letters known as Baḥr al-'Ulūm (the ocean of sciences), who has also received mention in the Encyclopaedia of Islām, have employed their pens in expounding the meaning hidden behind the wonderful brevity of the style of this book.

In the beginning 'Ilm al-Fiqh' and 'Ilm Uṣūl al-Fiqh' were one and the same thing, but in course of time they became two separate sciences. The Aḥkām Mustakhrajah (deduced judgments) began to be called Fiqh, while those principles which governed those Aḥkām Mustakhrajah received the name of 'Ilm Uṣūl al-Fiqh'. It was Imām Shāfi'ī who first wrote a book on this subject. The relation between these two sciences is the same as that between dogmas and scholastic theology, that is to say, just as the aim of the latter is to rationalise the former, similarly the object of 'Ilm Uṣūl al-Fiqh is to lay down principles from which corollaries may be rationally inferred.

The book consists of an introduction, two main sections, one called Mabādi (data) and the other Mqāṣid (conclusions), and an appendix. The introduction contains discussions on the definition, scope and purpose of this science. The author defines it as a brief statement of the arguments and principles a theologian requires in order to work out the detailed arguments. For instance, says he, this science deals with such a principle as may guide us to infer from the verse, Ātū al-Zakāt (آتُوا الزَّكَاةَ), that Zakāt is incumbent and necessary. The difference between logic and Uṣūl al-Fiqh is this that the former is concerned with the mode of arguing and thinking and not with the truth, or otherwise, of the promises, while the latter aims at both the aspects. The four 'roots' for the deduction of laws, the Qur'ān, Sunnāh (the Prophet's sayings and doings), Ijmā' (consensus) and Qiyās (analogy), are the subject-matter of this science. The purpose of Uṣūl al-Fiqh is to gain knowledge of religious injunctions.

The section of Mabādi is divided into three divisions called Maqālāhs. The first Maqālāh deals with logical problems, and so it may be regarded as a chapter on logic. The second Maqālāh is again divided into four chapters. The first deals with Hākīm, that is to say, the principal or final authority for good and bad. The author says that God is unanimously recognised to be the final authority ; but according to the Ash'arites goodness and badness are religious judgments, that is, the action which has been ordered to be done by religion is good and that which is prohibited is bad. The Hanafites and Mu'tazilites, on the other hand, hold that goodness and badness exist in things themselves, independently of religious commands and prohibitions. He further discusses this problem in detail and points out the difference between Hanafites on the one hand and the Mu'tazilites on the other.

The second chapter of the second Maqālah deals with the nature of Hukm and its various kinds, such as Farḍ (obligatory), Wājib (incumbent), Mustahabb (approved), Mandūb (a thing the doing of which is more excellent than leaving it undone but which it is allowable to leave undone), Jā'iz (allowable), Makrūh (disapproved), and Harām (unlawful). The third chapter is devoted to a discussion on man's capability or incapability of religious responsibilities. The fourth contains discussions on religious obligations.

The third Maqālah dwells on some subtle grammatical, philological and rhetorical topics which are essential for a thorough understanding of the language of the Islamic scripture.

The Maqāsid consists of four chapters called Uṣūl, dealing with the four 'roots' of the Islamic deductions. The appendix dwells upon Ijtihād.

It may be of interest to note that Amān Allāh Benārsī, an eminent scholar of the age, was a contemporary of Muḥibb Allāh. They used to hold polemic discussions with each other on Uṣūl al-Fiqh. We find that Muḥibb Allāh often refers to his rival in his book, in order to refute his way of thinking.

The Musallam al-Thubūt as a text-book is highly appreciated not only in India but also in Egypt. The author was an expert in writing text-books, and several commentaries have been written upon them. But it is a matter of great regret that this way of writing text-books and commentaries has been harmful rather than useful to learning. Both these forms of literary composition were carried to extremes. The text-books are brief to obscurity or even worse, while the commentaries are tedious, lengthy and full of uncalled for and unnecessary matter, so that it is very difficult, even for a serious student, to follow the main trend of thought. But we cannot blame Muḥibb Allāh for this defect, for this way of writing text-books had been long established as the accepted fashion of the time and had been regarded as a laudable practice. His merit as a text-book writer should be judged from the standard of the time in which he lived and not from that of our time, in which text-books are written as lucidly and clearly as possible.

(b) Commentaries on Standard Books of Uṣūl
Fiqh: Two Books

(1) A commentary on Jalāl al-Dīn al-Kḥabbāzī's (691/1291) Mughnī (شرح المعنى) compiled by 'Umar b. Ishāq al-Hindī. His full name is Abū Ḥafṣ Sirāj al-Dīn 'Umar b. Ishāq al-Hindī. Having received his education from Wajih al-Dīn Dihlawī and Shams al-Dīn Khatīb Dihlawī and other Indian scholars, he went to Egypt where he was recognised as a great theologian and was, later on, appointed a Qāḍī. He is the author of many books. He was chiefly interested in Fiqh. He died in 773/1371. His commentary on the Mughni is copious and reliable. Ḥājī Khalīfah has mentioned it.

(2) A commentary on the celebrated Abu'l-Barakāt al-Nasafī's Manār al-Anwār (شرح منار الانوار) composed by Mullā Jīwan whom we have known as the author of the Tafsīr-i-Aḥmadi. He states in his introduction that there are several commentaries on this book, but they are either too lengthy and tedious or too short and obscure.

The value of this work may be judged by the fact that when he went to Madīnah and delivered lectures there on this book, they were so much appreciated by the scholars there that he was urged to combine and expand them into the form of a regular commentary on the Manār, and this commentary he completed during his short stay at Madīnah. On this commentary more than one super-commentary has been written in India.

III. FIQH (PROPER)—(a) HANAFI SCHOOL

(a) Fatāwā : Five Books

(1) Al-Fatāwā al-Ḥammādiyyah (الفتاوى الحمادية) compiled by Abu'l-Faṭḥ Rukn b. Ḥusām al-Dīn al-Muftī of Nagore, while he was at Nahrwālah in Gujarāt, with the help of his son, at the instance of Qāḍī Ḥammād al-Dīn b. Qāḍī Akram, after whom this book was named. Nothing more is known of the author and the patron. From the works quoted in this book and from those containing references to it, it may be inferred that this book was composed in the end of the eighth or in the beginning of the ninth century of the Hijra. The author has given a long list of all the books which he consulted for the compilation of this work. It is a reliable book and is quoted in the Fatāwā 'Ālamgiri. The arrangement is the same as in other collections of Fatāwā.

(2) Ibrāhīm Shāhiyyah fi'l-Fatāwā al-Ḥanafīyyah (ابراهيم شاهيه في الفتاوى الحنفية) composed by Shihāb al-Dīn Aḥmad b. Muḥammad entitled Nizām Jilānī, for the Sultān Ibrāhīm 'Ādil Shāh (941-955/1534-1548) with the help of one hundred and sixty books. Hājī Khalīfah has mentioned it and said : وهو كبير كقاضى خان، جمعه من مائه وستين (It is a large book like the Fatāwā of Qādī Khān. It has been compiled from one hundred and sixty books.)

(3) Fatāwā Jāmi' (or Majma') al-Barakāt (فتاوى جامع البركات) compiled by Abu'l-Barakāt in the time of Awrangzīb. It is, according to the usual arrangement of works on Fiqh, divided into several books, each book being subdivided into many chapters. It is not a voluminous work.

(4) Khizānat al-Riwāyāt (مخزانة الروايات) composed by Chakan al-Hindī of Gujarāt (920/1514). Hājī Khalīfah has also mentioned it. It is just like the preceding books, a work on the details of the Ḥanafī laws, and is a mere compilation from various works of the sixth, seventh and eighth centuries which the author often quotes. The order of the arrangement is just like that of others, except that a 'Book of Knowledge' by way of an introduction has been put in the beginning. The author states in the beginning that he has throughout his life been interested in the studies of Fiqh and in the investigation of theological problems, the results of which he has arranged in the present work.

In the 'Book of Knowledge' he deals with the excellences of knowledge and men of letters. Being Hanafi, he has written a discourse about the merits and qualifications of Imām Abū Ḥanīfah. He also explains the technicalities of Fatāwā and Muftī. As regards the principles of Fatāwā, he says that in the first place it must be based on positive proof, derived from the Qur'ān and Ḥadīth. Failing that, it is to be based upon the decisions of Abū Ḥanīfah, then upon those of Abū Yūsuf and afterwards upon those of Muḥammad al-Ṣhāyḇānī, and so on. The Muftī is at liberty to choose any way that he likes, if Abū Ḥanīfah thinks in one way and both of his pupils in another; but if any of them sides with the teacher, then their decision is to be given preference, except when the standard theologians have, for the sake of some expediency (Istiṣlāḥ), followed the single opinion of either of the two pupils. If a Muftī happens to find a reliable Ḥadīth and he is satisfied with its holding good, the opinion of Abū Ḥanīfah should be given up, according to his well-known saying, 'Abandon my opinion if it is opposed to a genuine Ḥadīth.'

(5) Fatāwā 'Ālamgīrī (فتاویٰ عالمگیری) known outside India as al-Fatāwā al-Hindiyyah, which is superior to all the Indian works of this class and one of the best books ever produced on the Hanafi Law after the compilation of the well-known Hidāyah, which is valued by Hānafīs next to the Qur'ān as indicated by these two couplets :

أن الهداية كالقرآن قد نسخت  ما صنفوا قبلها في الشرع من كتب
فاحفظ قواعدها و اسلك مسالكها  يسلم مقالك من زيغ و من كذب

(Verily the Hidāyah has, like the Qur'ān, cancelled all the religious books that were composed before. Then master its principles and traverse its paths, so that your speech may be safe from error and untruth.)

This vast work, consisting of six volumes, was composed by a committee of Indian theological doctors, with Shaykh Nizām as the president, appointed by Awrangzīb, one of the greatest patrons of Islamic learning in India. By the composition of this valuable work India has made an appreciable contribution to Arabic literature on the subject of Fiqh. It is not an original work, but at the same time not a mere reproduction. As mentioned already, no book can be expected to have been original on Fiqh, after the compilation of the standard works, and also in view of the stagnant condition of Islamic learning at that time. The merit of this work lies in its being compiled not by a single author, but by a group of eminent theologians who had consulted all the previous standard books and spared no pains to produce a reliable and useful compilation. The following are some of its special features :

- (1) The arrangement is the same as that of the Hidāyah.
- (2) Great efforts have been made, with the utmost possible caution and ingenuity, to discuss and explain all problems.

74 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

- (3) It is devoid of recapitulation and superfluous matter.
- (4) It is also free from unnecessary arguments and parallels.
- (5) In most cases, it is confined to the obvious aspects of the traditions and opinions quoted, and has nothing to do with rare decisions, except when there is no other solution.
- (6) It always gives quotations from the standard books.
- (7) When there are two conflicting solutions for one and the same problem in the standard books, it gives preference to either of the two, by adding additional arguments.

(b) Books on Various Topics Relating to Fiqh: Five Books

(1) Zubdat al-Aḥkām fī Ikhtilāf al-A'immat al-A'lām (زبدة الأحكام في اختلاف الأئمة الأعلام) by Abū Ḥafs Sirāj al-Dīn 'Umar b. Ishāq, whom we have already noticed. The object of this book is to point out all the differences of all the four schools of Fiqh. It is arranged under the usual headings; and the subject is dealt with problem by problem, the differences of the four systems being given, if there are any. For instance, in the 'Book of Purification' (كتاب الطهارة), the author says that all of them agree that the essentials (Furūd) of an ablution are four in number: washing of the face, washing of both the hands up to the elbows, passing the wet hands over the head, and lastly the washing of both the feet. But they disagree as to some additional details. Niyyah (intention) and Tartīb (order) are desirable but not essential to Ḥanafīs, contrary to Shāfi'īs, while Mālikites hold that the former is Fard but not the latter. This work is somewhat new of its kind. It is brief and well arranged.

(2) Al-Mansak al-Ṣaghīr (المنسك الصغير) composed by Raḥmat Allāh b. 'Abd Allāh al-Sindhī (990/1582). Raḥmat Allāh and his friend 'Abd Allāh, two natives of Sind, went to the Hijāz and settled there and became disciples of 'Alī Muttaqī of Burhānpūr, the author of the Kanz al-'Ummāl. These two friends were much respected there for their piety and learning and were called Shaykhayn. 'Abd al-Haqq of Delhi, who was also a pupil of 'Alī Muttaqī, records that Khwājah 'Abd al-Rashīd used to remark that these two Shaykhayn often reminded him of the other Shaykhayn Abū Bakr al-Siddīq and 'Umar al-Fārūq.¹

I saw a MS. of the work in the Berlin Library.² It is, as indicated by its very title, a book on the laws concerning pilgrimage. The author wrote a voluminous work on this topic, entitled al-Mansak al-Kabīr (المنسك الكبير) of which the present work is an abridgement. The value of this book may be judged from the fact that a great theologian of Persia, no other than Mullā 'Alī al-Qārī (1014/1605) thought it worthwhile to write a commentary on it.

(3) Tahqīq Arāḍī al-Hind (تحقيق اراضى الهند) composed by Shaykh Jalāl Thānesarī (982/1574). He was both a learned man and a Ṣūfī, being the Khalīfah of the saint 'Abd al-Quddūs Gangohī. The present book

1. Akhbār al-Akhyār, 273.

2. Berlin No. 4055,

relates to landed property in India. As it deals exclusively with problems that are peculiar to India, a fuller description may not be out of place.

The object of the author in writing this book is to refute the idea of some scholars that if any piece of land in India is given by the Imām, that is to say, the Muslim king, to an undeserving Muslim, it does not become his legal property and hence it is not lawful for him to sell it and benefit by the price it fetches.

He says that India was conquered four centuries ago by force and not by peaceful means ; and it is not known who was the owner and of what land. Nobody knows what has happened to the original owners during this long time. Under these circumstances all lands in India are unclaimed property. If, in any village, there are the decendants of those non-Muslims who owned the land before the conquest of India by the Muslims, they cannot continue to be the legitimate owners of the land, as they have not been on good terms with the Muslims. Hence the condition of the Indian land is this, that it is neither distributed among the victorious warriors nor is in the possession of the non-Muslims. If later on the survivors of the original non-Muslim owners began somehow or other to cultivate these pieces of land, it would not imply that their possession of the land has been confirmed by the State. Thus the author concludes that all the lands in India are the property of Bayt al-Māl and whosoever cultivates them, having the permission of the Imām, becomes the legitimate owner of them in virtue of their cultivation.

If in any village, further argues the author, there are the descendants of those non-Muslims whose possession of the land was confirmed by the Imām, it may be said that in the first place their lineage is not certain, and in the second place, there is a difference of opinion between the Ḥanafī and Shāfi'ī schools as regards this point, i.e., whether the Imām can confirm the possession of a non-Muslim owner after the conquest of the territory by Muslims. According to Shāfi'ī law, an Imām cannot give land to a Kāfir as it is an encroachment on the right of the victorious warriors and fighting units, while the Ḥanafī legists take the contrary view. The author, weighing the arguments of both the schools, concludes that in these problems we must follow the Shāfi'ī law, especially when non-Muslims are not on good terms with the Muslims and do not humble themselves, and so the Qur'ānic verse, حتى يوتوا الجزية من يدهم (i.e., until they pay the toll-tax with humility), does not apply to them.

(4) Farā'id al-Islām (فرائض الاسلام), composed by Muḥammad Hāshim b. 'Abd al-Ghafūr al-Sindhī (1174/1760). The author received his education from Makhdūm Diyā' al-Dīn and soon rose into prominence as a practical scholar in his province on account of his learning and earnest zeal for the spread of Islām. Through his influence hundreds of Hindus are said to have embraced Islam. He was in correspondence with Nādir Shāh, who held him in high favour. He is the author of several books.

In the present work, the author deals with the essentials (Farā'id) of worship, and gives them a definite number. He has reckoned them to be one thousand two hundred and sixty-two, of which three hundred and thirty-two relate to faith and the rest to practice. He has classified all the Farā'id under various headings, systematically arranged. This book is of a somewhat new type and is full of information.

(5) Jāmi' al-Ta'zīrāt (جامع التعزيرات). This work is comparatively modern, but not of the period after the Indian Mutiny. It was written in 1220 A.H. (1805) by Sirāj al-Dīn 'Alī who was the Qāḍī at Calcutta when Henry Clerk and Herbert Harrington were judges there.

The author states that though the most important section of Fiqh is that which deals with Hadd (Divine ordinance), Qisās (retaliation) and Ta'zīr (punishments for criminal offences), as it is the section through which the life and property of a man are rendered safe and secure, yet there is not a single book dealing exclusively with these problems. Having felt the need for such a work, he, at the encouragement of Herbert Harrington, composed this work. This book contains an introduction, seven chapters, and a conclusion. In the introduction he distinguishes between a Hadd and a Ta'zīr in the following way :

- (i) Hadd is fixed by the Nass (explicit text), while Ta'zīr depends upon the will of the Imām or the Qāḍī.
- (ii) Hadd cannot hold good when there is a doubt of the slightest degree, while Ta'zīr is established by a doubt.
- (iii) A minor is immune from Hadd but not from Ta'zīr.

- (iv) Hadd is common to both a Muslim and a non-Muslim, whereas Taz'ir is applicable to a Muslim only.

Although the book has been written entirely from the Muslim standpoint and strictly follows Fiqh, yet one cannot but notice the influence of the newly brought culture of the West in the book. The arrangement and the treatment of the subject reveal it. It is an interesting work and is a credit to the author. It is a matter of regret that it has not been discovered what reception this book received at the hands of the Indian Muslims at that time. It would have been interesting to know that.

(b) Works on Shafi'i Fiqh: Two Books

As already mentioned, the majority of the Indian Muslims adhere to the Hanafī school. Only in Southern India are the followers of the Imām Shāfi'ī to be found. They are largely the descendants of those Arabs who migrated there from Southern Arabia; and as the emigrants were Shāfi'ī, a large number of their descendants also adhere to the same school. In Mālābār where Shāfi'īs are found in a majority, and where Arabic studies are almost as popular as Persian in Northern India, it might reasonably be expected that there must have been written some books on the Shāfi'ī law. I have found only two books, one written in Mālābār and the other near Bombay.

(1) Fiqh-i-Makhḍūmī (فقه مخدومی), composed by 'Alī b. Aḥmad al-Mahā'imī (835/1431), the author of the Tafsīr-i-Raḥmānī whom we have already noticed. It is a small book and relates to 'Ibādāt only. It has been lithographed and also translated into Urdu at Bombay. *Abd al-Haqq, the author of the Urdu Tafsir al-Qur'ān, states in his review of the book that save a few slight errors that have crept in, the book is quite a useful work for the average Shāfi'ī.

(2) Qurrat al-'ayn (قرة العين) and its commentary, the Faṭḥ al-Mu'in (فتح المعين), both composed by Zayn al-Dīn b. 'Abd al-'Azīz (d. after 991/1583), the author of the Tuḥfat al-Mujāhidīn (تحفة المجاهدين). Very little is known of the author. A passing remark occurs in the Akḥbār al-Akhyār (اخبار الاخيار) by 'Abd al-Haqq (1052/1642). 'Alī Muttaqī, the spiritual leader of 'Abd al-Haqq, when relating his adventures in Mālābār, says that he happened to see 'Abd al-'Azīz there and that he was Shāfi'ī and a Qāḍī. Besides the Tuḥfat al-Mujāhidīn and the present work, Zayn al-Dīn wrote another book which contains Aḥādīth and Āthār (traditions) about death and the after life.

The present work is a valuable, handy book on Shāfi'ī Fiqh and is popular in Mālābār.

CHAPTER V

TAṢAWWUF OR ISLAMIC MYSTICISM AND ETHICS

Having considered the contribution of India to the branches of Arabic literature concerned with the Qur'ān, Ḥadīth and Fiqh, in the present chapter we will pass in review what she has contributed towards that department of Arabic literature which, though still connected with Islamic theology, is less dogmatic and more emotional, less rigid and more catholic, less argumentative but more convincing and appealing—a literature that concerns itself with the inner life of the Muslim and embodies the emotional philosophy of Islām.

When Indian thinkers first began to write in Arabic, the standard books on Ṣūfīism, such as the Kitāb al-Lum'ah (كتاب اللمعة) by Shaykh Abū Naṣr (370/980), al-Risālat al-Qushayriyyah (الرسالة القشيرية) by Qushayrī (465/1072), the 'Awārif al-Ma'ārif (عوارف المعارف) by Shihāb al-Dīn al-Suhrawardī (632/1234), and the Fuṣūṣ al-Ḥikam (فصوص الحکم) by Ibn 'Arabī (638/1240), had already been composed and mysticism had taken a definite form, which the Indian Ṣūfīs followed in much the same way as those of other countries. Hence, we find in the Arabic literature of mysticism produced in India the same method of treatment as in earlier writings and a repetition of familiar subject-matter.

The theory, which represents Islamic Ṣūfīism to be the product of Indian thought, has become discredited and modern researches have shown that Islamic mysticism is a complex, derived from various sources, one of which is Indian Buddhism. But it is noteworthy that if Islamic mysticism was ever influenced by Indian thought, this influence was probably operative outside India, that is to say, in Eastern Persia and Transoxiana where Buddhistic teaching is said to have exerted considerable influence in the eleventh century. But it has not absorbed elements from the Vedānta or any other Indian system, as far as known to the present writer, since its advent in a fully developed form into India. We do not find in the Sūfīistic literature produced in India anything alien to the earlier Islamic mysticism as it was brought to India, with the exception of certain astrological references that have crept into some writings.

Of the many books produced in India on Taṣawwuf and on the allied subject, about a score deserve mention. They fall under the following heads :

1. THEOLOGICAL SUPPORT OF THE "PATH": THREE WORKS

(1) Lawāih al-Anwār fīl Radd ‘Alā Man Ankara ‘Alā al-‘Ārifīn min Laṭā‘if al-Asrār (لوائح الانوار في الرد على من انكر على العارفين من لطائف الاسرار), composed by Sirāj al-Dīn ‘Umar b. Ishāq, previously mentioned, in reply to a question put to him, whether a certain Ṣūfī was to be condemned for having regarded the Laylat al-Qadr as inferior to the Laylat al-Tajallā in the following two couplets:

تجلّى بأوصاف الجمال فشاهدت عيون قلوب ما به حمار ذوانفكر
فيا ليلة فيها السعادات والمنى لقد صغرت في جنبها ليلة القدر

[He (God) appeared with all the attributes of beauty, and the eyes of hearts saw what bewildered the thinker.

How glorious the night, full of bliss and hope, compared to which even the Laylat al-Qadr is insignificant !]

The author commences his treatise with the praise of God and His Prophet in a manner befitting his theme, and then, after discussing the nature of Ma‘rifah (Divine Knowledge) he gives his judgment in favour of the Ṣūfī.

(2) Al-Qawl al-Jamīl fī Bayān Sawā’ al-Sabīl (القول الجميل في بيان سواء السبيل) composed by Shāh Walī Ullāh. The book is divided into several chapters. The first chapter deals with the nature and essence of Bay‘ah (allegiance). The second contains an account of the various grades of the "traversers of the Path" (al-Sālikūn). The third, fourth and fifth are devoted to the description of the Ṣūfiistic practices of the Qādiri, Chishtī and Naqshbandī orders. The sixth deals with the significance and importance of the Nisbah (affinity or attachment with the spiritual leader).

The interesting character of the book justifies a passing reference to some of its important points.

The author first traces the origin of Bay'ah (allegiance). He says that in the early days of Islām ; it was of five kinds : Bay'ah by way of political allegiance to the Caliph ; Bay'ah at the time of conversion to Islām, Bay'ah by way of pledge at the time of flight ; Bay'ah by way of a pledge to be firm in a religious war ; and lastly, Bay'ah by way of a pledge to live a pious and religious life, with which Bay'ah he identifies the Bay'ah of the "Path" (Tariqah) and declares it to be a Sunnah, as by a reliable Ḥadīth it is established that on many occasions the Prophet took this pledge from Muslim men and women. This kind of Bay'ah is mentioned in the Qur'ān also.¹

As to the utility of the Bay'ah of the "Path," he says that it is a psychological fact that if one and the same piece of advice is given to one person by various bodies, the effect varies according to the personality of the adviser. If he is of an outstanding personality and character, his admonitions will be more effective upon his disciple.

Then the author lays down the following five conditions for a spiritual leader. In the first place, he should have an adequate practical knowledge of the Islamic theology. Secondly, he must be a strict observer of justice and piety. Thirdly, he should not be influenced by worldly considerations. Fourthly, he should advise his disciples in accordance with the commands and prohibitions of religion. Lastly, he must have obtained a full training from an older spiritual leader.

1. The Qur'an, ix, 112, xlviii, 10, 18, lx, 12.

The author also lays down some conditions for a candidate for discipleship : he must be sane and of age, and must have a strong faith in the man whom he chooses as his spiritual leader.

Then the author describes the way in which the Bay'ah of the "Path" is affected. The spiritual leader should hold the hand of his would-be disciple and make him recite the formula of the Islamic creed and then, after bidding him repent of his previous misdeeds and sins, should take from him a solemn pledge that in future, as far as possible, he will keep himself free from sins.

At the end the author describes the methods and practices of those various mystical orders to which he himself belonged.

As the author is considered to be one of the greatest traditionists of his age, this work is valued as being reliable and trustworthy.

(3) Irshādu'ṭṬālibīn wa Tā'idu' l-Murīdīn (ارشاد الطالبين و تأييد المريدين), composed by Qāḍī Thānā' Ullāh of Panipat whom we have already known as the author of the Tafsīr-i-Maẓhari. This work is divided into six sections, called 'books.' The contents of these sections are as follows :

Section (i) On Sainthood.

Section (ii) On the duties of disciples.

Section (iii) On the duties of spiritual leaders.

Section (iv) Describing the ways of spiritual progress and the attainment of Sainthood.

Section (v) On the various stages of Divine nearness.

Section (vi) On the merits and excellences of some great Saints, viz., 'Abdu'l-Qādir Jilānī, Bahā'u'd-Dīn Naqshbandī, Aḥmad Sarhindī entitled Mujaddid-i-alf-i-thānī, his sons and Mirzā Jān-Jānān (the author's spiritual leader).

Each of these sections is further divided into several chapters, dealing with interesting and useful topics concerning Ṣūfīism.

The author being a great theologian of his age, this work is also regarded as authentic and reliable from the orthodox stand-point.

II. TASAWWUF PROPER : SIX WORKS

(1) Al-Tuḥafat al-Mursalat Ila al-Nabiyy (التهافت المرسلة الى النبي), composed by Muḥammad b. Faḍl Allāh (1029/1620). The author was a disciple of Wajīh al-Dīn of Gujarāt who was a Ṣūfī and a man of learning. This treatise deals with the problem of pantheism (Waḥdat al-Wujūd). He says that God is the only Being (Wujūd) and that Being, though only one, appears in different garments. This Being is the reality of all existing things, and this Being, as such, can neither be revealed to anyone nor can be comprehended by the mind.

For this Being there are seven following stages :

The first stage is Absolute Being—Being, without any restrictions or attributes. This stage is called Aḥadiyyat and is the reality of the real. The second stage is that of the first restriction, which implies the self-knowledge of this Being in a summary manner and of its attributes and of all creatures to come. This stage is called al-Waḥdat and is the reality of Muḥammad.

The third stage is that of the second restriction, which implies the detailed knowledge of His Being and attributes and of the world. This stage is called Wāḥidiyyat and is the reality of man. All these three stages are declared to be eternal.

The fourth stage is that of spirits, i e., things abstract and simple (uncompounded). The fifth stage is that of 'Ālam al-Miṭhāl', that is to say, things compound, but still too fine to be divisible. The sixth stage is that of 'Ālam al-Amṭhāl', that is to say, things compound, material and so capable of divisibility. The seventh stage is that which comprehends all the foregoing stages, and is the last division, and is identified with man.

The names of the first three stages are different derivatives of one and the same root, Aḥad, which means 'One.' Philologically, there is no difference between the meanings of these words, but the author has made use of them, to suit his own purpose as if there were shades of difference in their meanings. The same is the case with the names of the fifth and sixth stages (i.e., عالم امثال and عالم مثال).

The author says that this Being is neither inter-fused in, nor united with, the creatures, otherwise the plurality of being would follow. Further on, he says that the universe with all that it contains, is accidental while the essence is the only Being. This theory that God is an essence is incompatible with the generally accepted theory of the Ash'arī school which maintains that God is neither Jawhar (essence) nor 'Araḍ (accident).

Then the author describes the three classes of those who believe in pantheism : in the first place, those who know for certain that He is the reality of all creatures but do not see Him in them ; secondly, those who see Him in creatures but not vice versa ; thirdly, those who see Him in them and them in Him. Under the last mentioned class he puts the prophets and the highest saints, technically called Aqlāb.

At the end the author gives in support of pantheism, quotations from the Qur'ān and Ḥadīth, some of which may be given here to show what sort of support this theory receives from the Qur'ān and Ḥadīth.

(a) Qur'ānic Verses :

- (1) لله المشرق والمغرب (God's is the East and the West.)
- (2) واينما تولوا فثم وجه الله (Wherever you turn [you find] God's face.)
- (3) نحن اقرب اليه من حبل الوريد (We are nearer to him than his neck vein.)
- (4) وهو معكم اينما كنتم (He is with you wherever you are.)

(5) هو الاول والاخر والظاهر والباطن (He is the first and the last and the manifest and the hidden.)

(b) Hadith :

(١) ان احدكم اذا قام الى الصلوة قائما ينادى ربه فان ربه بينه وبين القبلة
(When one of you says his prayer, he certainly whispers with his Lord. Verily his Lord is between him and the Qiblah.)

(٢) ولا يزال عبدي يتقرب الى بالنوافل حتى احبه فاذا احبته كنت سمعه الذى يسمع به و بصره الذى يبصر به -

(My servant goes on approaching Me by performing Nawāfil, i e., additional prayers, until I begin to love him. And when I love him I become his hearing with which he hears, and his sight with which he sees.)

On the strength of such quotations one is led to doubt the theory that pantheism in Islām is due to external influences. It is quite conceivable that if Islām had been shut off from other contacts, even then this theory of pantheism would have been worked out in Islām.

The importance of this work may be judged from this fact that no less than three authors have written commentaries on it.¹

(2) Another work of this nature is the 'Aqā'id al-Muwaḥḥidīn (عقائد الموحدين), composed by 'Abdul-Karīm b. Muḥammad of Lahore. The author was a disciple of Shaykh Niẓām al-Dīn of Balkh and was a learned Ṣūfī, and belonged to the Chishtī Order. He wrote several treatises on Tasawwuf. The present one is on the lines of what may be termed 'Scholastic

1, See Brockelmann's Geschechte, II, 418.

90 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

Mysticism' as it is devoted to the scholastic treatment of the Sūfiistic creeds. It is divided into nine following chapters :

- (i) Hypocrisy.
- (ii) Apostasy.
- (iii) Spiritual leadership.
- (iv) Discipleship.
- (v) Attachment of the disciple with the spiritual leader.
- (vi) Affectation and sincerity.
- (vii) Existence and annihilation.
- (viii) Recital or recollection (Dhikr).
- (ix) Pantheism.

The author is a staunch advocate of pantheism. In support of his belief, he has given a logical argument, which may be mentioned here. He says that God has no limit or end (Munazzah 'An al-Ḥadd wa 'l-Nihāyah), which means that nothing at all is devoid of Him, otherwise it would follow that God is limited up to the boundary of things and that things exist by themselves. He also quotes in support of his theory a Hādith which runs as follows :

كان الله في الازل ولم يكن معه شى وهو الان على ما كان

(In the beginning [i.e., before the creation of the world] there was nothing with God, and now He is as He was then.)

(3) Anfāsu'l-Khawāṣṣ (الفاس الخواص), by Muḥibb Ullāh of Allahabad, who has already been known to us as the author of the Tarjamatu'l-Kitāb. This work is on the lines of the Fuṣūṣ al-Ḥikam by the great Ṣūfī, Ibn 'Arabī, and is divided into 81 sections, called Anfās (plu. of nafas, meaning 'saying'). Each nafas is named after the prophet or the saint, the esoteric interpretation of whose teaching and life it contains. The book begins with al-Nafas al-Aḥmadi, named after al-Ḥaḥiqatu'l-Aḥmadiyyah (the reality of Muḥammad). Then follow the Anfās of the prophets from Adam, Idrīs, Nūḥ and Ibrāhīm to the last Prophet Muḥammad and the Anfās of the first four Caliphs and then come the Anfās of some important saints of various places. The last nafas is devoted to the author's own spiritual leader Abū Sa'īd b. Nūr b. 'Alī b. 'Abdul-Quddūs. Each nafas begins with the saying of the prophet or the saint after whom it is named. In the case of the prophets, their sayings are those which occur in the Qur'ān for instance, the nafas of Adam begins with وقال ادوا لبسر آدم صفى الله ربنا ظلمنا انفسنا and that of Idrīs with قل ادريس عليه اسلام سبحان الله والحمد لله ولا اله الا الله النح and that of Nūḥ with قال نوح لقومه يا قوم اعبدوا الله ما لكم من اله النح.

The whole book, like the Fuṣūṣ is full of mystical discussions and theosophical speculations and advocates the doctrine of Wahdatu'l-Wujūd (pantheism).

(4) Al-Taswiyah or fully entitled al-Taswiyah bayn al-Ifādah wa'l-Qabūl (التسوية بين الافاده والقبول), composed by the same author. It is a small but very philosophical treatise, in which the author has tried to prove that ليس الممكن غير الواجب تعالى, that is to say, the creature is not other than God. Mullā Maḥmūd Jawnpūrī, a well-known philosopher of India and a contemporary of Muḥibb Ullāh, thought it worthwhile to write a treatise in the refutation of the Taswīyah. This refutation was, in its turn, refuted by one of Muḥibb Ullāh's disciples, named Ḥabīb Ullāh.¹ The importance of al-Taswīyah may also be judged from this fact that several commentaries have been written on it. One of the commentators is no less than Amān Ullāh of Benares, the well-known class-fellow of Muḥibb Ullāh of Bīhar. Mawlawī 'Abdul-Ḥalīm of Lucknow has also written glosses on it.

(5) Al-Maghālīṭ al-ʿĀmmah (المغالط العامة), by the same author. It is a huge book consisting of a long introduction and 164 sections called Maghālīṭ (plu. of Maghlaṭah, fallacy). The introduction is by itself a treatise, entitled Iʿānatu'l-Ikhwān (إعانة الإخوان), containing 15 chapters. The author says that when he explained his Sūfīistic ideas and beliefs to the people, they requested him to expel the fallacies committed by those who are ignorant of the real truth, and so he wrote this book.

(6) ʿAqā'idu'l-Khawāṣṣ (عقائد الخواص), by the same author. This book, as suggested by its very title, describes the beliefs of learned men and Sūfīs. It is divided into 21 sections called Daqā'iq (plu. of Daqīqah, meaning 'point'). They contain the Sūfīistic and esoteric interpretation and exposition of some religious topics such as God, His attribute, religious responsibility, reward and punishment, commands and prohibitions, human actions, Divine Will, prophetic office, angels, bodily resurrection, the essence of Faith, retribution, mercy, torture in the grave, Imāmat (Caliphate), etc. The author has suggested that because of the Daqā'iq that it contains, the book may also be entitled Daqā'iqu'l-'Urafā.

III. SUFIISTIC POETRY : ONE BOOK

It is Hidāyat al-Adhkiyā' ila Tariq al-Awliā' (هدايت الاولياء الى طريق الاولياء), composed by Zayn al-Dīn b. 'Alī al-Ma'barī, the grandfather of Zayn al-Dīn b. 'Abd al-'Azīz, whom we have known in the previous chapter. This poem was much appreciated and was copiously commented upon by two scholars: one Abū Bakr Makkī and the other Nawawī of Jāvā. Both those commentaries have been published. One of these commentators states that the cause of the composition of this poem is that the author was hesitating whether he should choose the study of theology or that of Sūfism. While he was asleep one night, he saw in a dream a man who told him that Tasawwuf was to be preferred. The next morning he composed this poem, consisting of one hundred and eighty couplets. This poem is in the form of a Qaṣīdah, the metre being al-Baḥr al-Kāmil and the letter lam being Ḥarf Rawī.

The author after the usual Ḥamd and Ṣalāt, says that piety is the basis of true happiness and felicity. Then he explains that the true path to the goal consists of Shari'ah, Tariqah and Ḥaqiqah, and explains this doctrine by an allegory. Shari'ah, says he, is like a boat, Tariqah, like an ocean, and Ḥaqiqah, like the precious pearl. Whosoever aspires after the pearl, must embark on the boat (Shari'ah) and then dive into the ocean (Tariqah). He then explains various virtues, such as repentance, contentment, sincerity, resignation, abstinence and so forth, which, says he, are essential for attaining to Ḥaḳīqah. Here are given some beginning couplets to indicate the style of the poem :

الحمد لله الموفق للعلا	حمداً يوافق به المتكامل
ثم الصلوه على الرسول المصطفى	ولال مع صحب واتباع الولا
تقوى الاله مدار كل سعاده	وتباع اهوا راس شر هائل
ان الطريق شريعته وطريقه	وحقيقه فاسع لها ما مثلا
فشريعه كسفينه وطريقه	كالبحر ثم حقيقه در غلا
فشريعه احد بدين التجالى	وقيامه بالامهوالمهي انحلا
وطريقه احد با حوط كالورع	وعزيمه كرياضه مشيتلا
وحقيقه لوصوله لامقصد	و مشاهد نورالتجلى بانجلا
من رام درا السفينه يركب	ويغوص بحرآ ثم درا حصلا
فكذ الطريقه والحقيقه بالحق	من غير فعل شريعته لن تحصلا
من رام ان يسلك طريقى الاوليا	فله حفظن هذى الوصايا عاملا

IV. METHODS AND PRACTICES OF SUFIISM :

TWO WORKS

(1) Al-Jawāhir al-Khamsah, (الجواهر الخمسة), originally composed in Persian by Muḥammad b. Khatīr al-Dīn, generally known as the Ghawth of Gawaliyār, and rendered into Arabic by a disciple of the second generation, Ṣibghat Ullāh of Barwaj (in Gujarāt).¹

¹ Dr Loth, the author of the Catalogue of Arabic MSS in the India Office Library, has incorrectly described it as the work of the original author himself. The translator, while giving the pedigree of the author, remarks : "He is the spiritual leader of Wajih al-Din of whom I am a disciple." This clearly shows that "I," the translator, and "he," the author, are two different persons. Loth infers from this passage that it was copied by the author's disciple, and so he thinks that this remark was by the scribe who copied it. This inference is incorrect. Another MS of this work, in the Berlin Library, written in a different hand, contains the same passage—which shows that it was not added by the scribe but by the translator. Besides this, Azād and others have mentioned Ṣibghat Ullāh as the Mu'arrif (translator into Arabic) of the work in question.

This work is divided into five sections styled Jawāhir, which represent the gradual progress of the Ṣūfī. The first section deals with the different methods and practices of devotional worship. The second dwells upon the higher forms of devotion. The third section is the most important, and deals with special kinds of ritual practice in connection with the ninety-nine names of God. It is very technical and can be understood only by those who are acquainted with this branch of *Ṣūfī*istic literature, as well as with astrology, for astrological considerations are here mentioned side by side with the ritual practices—a fact which may be attributed to Indian influence upon Islamic mysticism, though properly speaking there is no connection between astrology and *Ṣūfī*ism. These practices are shown to have some connections with the movements of the stars and so forth. For instance, a particular practice is said to be effective only when it is done at the time of a particular star being in a particular position.

The fourth section contains the spiritual exercises and practices of the Shattāriyyah order, to which the author belonged. The fifth section deals with the merits and excellences of those who seek after the Real and the True.

(2) Al-Risālah fī Sulūk Khulāṣat al-Sādāt al-Naqshbandiyyah (الرساله فى سلوك خلاصه السادات النقشبندية), composed by Tāj al-Dīn Zakariyyā (1050/1640), who was the author of several treatises on *Ṣūfī*ism. He also translated into Arabic Jāmī's Nafahāt and Wā'iz Kāshifī's Rashahāt.

In the first chapter the author gives the pedigree of the Naqshbandī order, to which he was attached. Then he says that just as a physical issue is impossible without a father, similarly a spiritual production is not feasible without a spiritual leader. He says : من لا شيخ له فالشيطان شريكه (Whosoever has no spiritual leader, finds a leader in Satan). In the second chapter he explains how union with God may be attained, for which purpose he suggests only two ways : either by constantly keeping the company of saints or by Dhikr (rendered as "recollection" by Professor Nicholson). Then he describes the ways and practices of "recollection" of the Naqshbandī order. The most important of these practices is that of inhaling and exhaling, after closing the eyes and pressing the tip of the tongue against the palate, mentally repeating the phrase لا اله الا الله in such a way as to begin it with inhaling and to finish it with exhaling.

The value of this work may be recognised from the fact that 'Abd al-Ghanī al-Nābulusī (1143/1730) has written an exhaustive commentary on it, under the title of Miftāḥ al-Ma'īyyah fī al-Ṭariq al-Naqshbandiyyah (مفتاح المعية في الطريق النقشبندية).

V. REVELATIONS : SUFISTIC UTTERANCES : ONE WORK

One of the works containing the inspired sayings of the Ṣūfīs deserves mention, viz., the Mulhamāt (ملهمات) by Jamāl al-Dīn Hānsawī, the great-grand disciple of Mu'īn al-Dīn Chishtī, who is held to be the king of all the Indian saints. The author was a descendant of the Imām Abū Ḥanīfah and a great Ṣūfī in his age. He was the founder of a sub-branch, named after him, of the Chishti order. His sayings are beautiful and inspiring, both in language and in spirit. Two passages may be given here :

طالب الدنيا جاهل	طالب العقبى عاقل	طالب المولى كامل
طالب الدنيا مردود	طالب العقبى مسعود	طالب المولى محمود
طالب الدنيا مغرور	طالب العقبى مسرور	طالب المولى منصور
طالب الدنيا مغبون	طالب العقبى ممنون	طالب المولى مامون
طالب الدنيا هالك	طالب العقبى سالک	طالب المولى مالک
طالب الدنيا ذليل	طالب العقبى جليل	طالب المولى خليل (الخ)

(The seeker after the world is ignorant, the seeker after the next world is wise, and the seeker after God is victorious, etc., etc.)

No translation can reproduce the beauty of the text.

In the other passage he explains the full significance of a real Faqir (mendicant). He has put together all conceivable virtues, for which it is difficult to find English equivalents. It runs as follow :

الفقر خلق شريف يتولد منه الصلاح والعفة والزهد والورع والتقوى والطاعة والعبادة والجوع والفاقة والمسكنة والقناعة والمروءة والبقوة والديانة والحيانة والامانة والسهو والتهجد والخضوع والخشوع والتذلل والتواضع والتحمل والكظم والعمو والاغماض والاشفاق والاتقاف والايثار والاطمأن والاکرام والاحسان والاعراض والاخلاص والانتقطاع والانفصال والصدق والصبر والسكون والحلم والرضا والبذل والجود والسخاوة والعفوف والرجاء والرياضة والمجاهدة والمراقبة والمواقفة والمداومة والمعاملة والتوحيد والتهذيب والتجريد والتفريد والوقار والمداراة والعناية والرعاية والشفقة والشفاعة واللطف والكرم والتفقد والشكر والفكر والذكر والحرمة والادب والاعتصام والاحترام والطلب والرغبة والغيرة والعبوة والبصره واليقظة والحكمة والهمة والمعرفة والحقيقة والخدمة والتسليم والتفويض والترك والتبذل واليقين والثقة والعناء والاستقامة وحسن الخلق وكل فقير وجدت فيه هذه الصفات سمى فقيراً كاملاً وإذا فقد لم يسمى فقيراً -

The following sayings of the same author are worth notice :

(a) The essence of prayers :

الصلوة كالجسد و الحضور كالروح وكل صلوة ليس فيها الحضور ليس فيها الروح -

“Prayers are like a body and presence of mind is like the soul, and prayers which are devoid of presence of mind are like body without soul.”

(b) Significance of Dhikr (recollection) :

الذكر ثلثة احرف الذا ل و الكاف و الراء فالذال عبارة عن الذكاء والكاف عبارة عن الكياسة والراء عبارة عن الرقة فمن ذكر المولى لصار ذكى القلب و كئيس النفس و صاحب الرقة -

“The word Dhikr consists of three letters, Dhal, Kāf and Rā”. The first letter stands for Dhakā (brightness), the second for Kiyāsah (sagacity), and the last for Riqqah (tenderness, mercy). So whosoever recollects the Master (God) becomes bright-hearted, sagacious-minded and compassionate.”

(c) The difference between a religious devotee (Zāhid) and a gnostic (Ārif) :

الزاهد يطهر ظاهره بالماء	و العارف يطهر باطنه من الهوى
الزاهد تارك الدنيا للعقبى	و العارف تارك العقبى للمولى
الزاهد يقطع السبيل	و العارف بالغ المنزل وترك الرحيل

“The devotee keeps his exterior clean with water and the gnostic keeps his interior clean from passions. The devotee renounces this world for the next, and the gnostic renounces even the next world for God. The devotee is still traversing the path, while the gnostic has already reached the destination and has given up departure."

(d) The characteristics of a gnostic are :

حرفة العارف ستة الاشياء :

١- اذا ذكر الله افتخر

٢- اذا ذكر نفسه احتقر

٣- اذا نظر في آيات الله اعتبر

٤- اذا هم بمعضية او شهوة انزجد

٥- اذا ذكر الله استبشر¹

٦- اذا ذكر ذلوه استغفر

"The profession of a gnostic consists of six things : (1) He feels proud when he recollects God, (2) he feels humiliated when he thinks of his own self, (3) he takes warning when he looks into the signs of God, (4) he is driven back when he thinks of a sin or a passion, (5) he rejoices when he recollects God, and lastly, (6) he asks forgiveness when he recollects his sins."

The language is so beautiful that it does not require any remark. The whole book is full of such Ṣūfiistic aphorisms, sublime in ideas and sweet in expression.

VI. COLLECTIONS OF MORAL APHORISMS :

TWO WORKS

(1) Jawāmi' al-Kilam fi'l-Mawā'iz al-Ḥikam (جوامع الكلام في الموعظا الحكم), by 'Alī Muttaqī Burhānpurī, mentioned several times in the preceding pages. The author states that this collection consists of about three thousand aphorisms, of which five hundred are Iqtibāsāt,

1. ذكر الله seems to be a misprint for some other words so that there may be a good contrast between these words and ذكر ذلوه in the next sentence.

100 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

i.e., quotations from the Qur'ān ; five hundred Taḍmīnāt, that is, Ḥadīth, which on account of their conciseness are preceded by introductory and explanatory phrases rhymed with them ; three hundred sentences of Ibn 'Aṭā' Iskandarī (709/1309) ; one hundred of his disciple, and the rest are the sayings of some early authors (Mutaqaddimūn).

These materials which invariably follow in the order above mentioned, are described under some eighty headings, arranged alphabetically as Bāb fi'l-Imān and Bāb fi'l-Iḥsān and so forth. As to the general character of the work, it may be said that it is of interest to those only who are Ḥuffāz, Mufasssirūn and Muḥaddithūn and are, at the same time, interested in Ṣūfīism, as the author himself points out in his introduction.

(2) The other work of this type is Mawārid al-Kilam wa Silk Durar al-Ḥikam (موارد الكلام و سلك درر الحکم), by the famous Persian poet of India, Abu'l-Fayḍ Fayḍī, the author of the Sawāṭi' al-Ilhām. This book is in the same style as that in which he wrote his commentary on the Qur'ān, that is to say, it is devoid of dotted letters just as the very title of the book is. The author has collected his material from the Qur'ān, Ḥadīth, and similar sources, and has reproduced them in his own way, in order to avoid dotted letters. Some people think that Fayḍī was a Shī'ah ; but in this very book he has highly praised the first four Caliphs in two places, in the beginning and also in the main portion under the heading Mawrid al-Ruḥamā'. He uses the word Ruḥamā' for Aṣḥāb to avoid dotted letters. These are the words he has employed for them in the

اول الرحماء معه اسلاماً و اكرمهم اكراماً صهر رسول الله صلعم و
اعدلهم عمرا المكرم و احلهم مههد كلام الله و مؤسس السور و اعلمهم ولد عمه
امدا لله الكرار -

After these words who will doubt his being a Sunnī. The value of this work lies in its style rather than in the subject-matter, and so it will be further described later on along with books of literary prose.

VII. COMMENTARIES ON THE WORKS WRITTEN OUTSIDE INDIA: TWO

The Sūfīistic philosophy of Ibn 'Arabī has found in India many supporters. Several Indian scholars have written commentaries on his famous work Fuṣūṣ al-Hikam, as will be clear from the perusal of the appendix. Of these Indian commentators, 'Alī Mahā'mī and Muḥibb Ullāh of Allahabad were scholars of repute. The latter was, as we have already seen, an eminent advocate of the theory of Waḥdata'l-Wujūd and a great admirer and exponent of Ibn 'Arabī's mystic philosophy. 'Alī's commentary is not known to be still in existence. The other commentary, entitled Tajalliyatu'l-Fuṣūṣ (تجلیة الفصوص), is in the possession of one of the commentator's descendants who is the present representative of his order at Allahabad. Apart from these two commentaries, there is another in the India Office Library, which may be reviewed here. The title of this commentary is Ḥall Mu'aḍalāt al-Fuṣūṣ (حل معضلات الفصوص) and the name of the commentator is Amīrullāh b. Munīr Ullāh of Bihār. It is not copious, as it explains only some obscure and objectionable passages in the text. One or two of his explanations may be given here.

Ibn 'Arabī in his book says that man is to God what the pupil is to the eye which sees, and that this is the reason why Insān (man) is so called. The objection to this statement is that it means that man is an instrument for the sight of God; and this is Kufr (heathenism). The commentator offers the following solution. It is admitted that man is the only purpose of the creation of this world. Hence man is the ultimate purpose of God's sight, just as a pupil is the ultimate purpose of the eye. At the most this inconsistency remains that in the case of the eye, the pupil is the efficient cause ('Illat-i-Fā'ilah), while in the other, it is the final purpose ('Illat-i-Ghā'iyyah). Another objection brought against this same statement is that from Ibn 'Arabī's definition of man, it follows that the world is eternal. The commentator replies that man is Ḥadīth (i.e., coming into existence in time) in consideration of his actual existence, but eternal in consideration of his being present in the knowledge of God before his existence. The latter is what Ibn 'Arabī means.

(2) Ithāf al-Sādāt al-Muttaqīn bi Sharḥ Iḥyā' 'Ulum al-Dīn (اتحاف السادات المتقين بشرح احياء علوم الدين), a commentary on al-Ghazālī's Iḥyā' by Sayyid Muḥammad Murtaḍā. The commentator was a native of Bilgrām, who after receiving his education from eminent scholars like Shāh Walī Ullāh and others, went to the Ḥejāz for further studies. He stayed for a long time at Zabīd, after which he began to be called "Zabīdī." From Zabīd he went to Cairo, where he died in 1205/1790. He was an eminent theologian and philologist of his period. He was the author of many works, of which Tāj al-‘Arūs, ‘Uqūd al-Jawāhir al-Munīfah (in support of the Ḥanafī school), and the work under consideration are the most important. This work has been published in thirteen volumes, lithographed in the Maghrabī script. In the beginning, the commentator, unlike other commentators, has devoted a considerable space to a full critical account of al-Ghazālī and his works. While commenting on the text, he fully discusses both sides of all the problems and traces out the chain of the narrators of all the Ḥadīth given by the original author. Just as the Tāj al-‘Arūs is a copious and important commentary on the Qāmūs, similarly the present work is a useful and illuminative commentary on the Iḥyā. These two great works bear testimony to Murtaḍā’s vast knowledge and wonderful learning. India may reasonably be proud of these contributions made to the Arabic literature.

VIII. LAWFULNESS OF SAMA (MUSIC):

THREE BOOKS

Whether Samā’ is lawful or not is a controversial problem. Some theologians allow it, while others do not: much has been written on this topic outside and inside India. Here three works, representing three different views, may be considered.

(1) Jadd al-Ḡhanā’ fi Ḥurmat al-Ḡhinā’ (جد الغناء في حرمة الغناء), composed by ‘Iṣmāt Ullāh Sabāranpūrī, (d. after 1090/1679),¹ who, besides being a theologian, was a mathematician also. His commentary on the Khulāṣat al-Ḥisāb is far more valuable than the present work. He holds that Samā' is unlawful according to the Qur'ān, Ḥadīth, judgments of jurists and in the opinions of the saints and scholars. He mentions all these authorities in various chapters. He says that the so-called Samā' did not exist during the first three centuries. It crept into Islām at a later period. At the end he refutes all the arguments of the opposite school.

(2) Kashf al-Qinā' 'an Ibāḥat al-Samā' (كشف القناع عن إباحة السماع), by Salām Ullāh b. Shaykh al-Islām, whom we have known as the author of glosses on the Tafsīr al-Jalālayn and the Muwattā'. This work represents the opposite opinion on Samā'. It is divided into five chapters. The first chapter contains Ḥadīth; the second, Āḥād; the third, Qiyās; the fourth, the sayings of jurists; and the fifth, the refutation of the arguments of the opposite party.

(3) The third book is a small tract on this topic by 'Īsā b. 'Abd al-Raḥīm of Gujarāt. This author takes a moderate view between the two extremes and advises his readers to take the safest course which lies in not indulging in music so far as action is concerned, and in not believing in its unlawfulness so far as theory is concerned.

IX. THE FORMULAE FOR INVOKING GOD'S BLESSINGS ON THE PROPHET: TWO BOOKS

As Ṣalāt, prayer for the Prophet, plays an important part in Tariqah (the 'path'), works on this topic may be included within the scope of Sūfīistic literature; and so two such works are reviewed here.

Both are by the same writer, Muḥammad Nāṣir 'Alī of Ghīyāthpūr, who is comparatively a modern scholar.

The first work is entitled Nāṣir al-'Ushshāq (ناصر العشاق) and contains hundreds of the formulae for invoking God's blessings upon the Prophet. The author has arranged them under twenty headings, such as parts of his body, his attributes, his garments, his furniture and so forth. The formula, for instance, runs :

اللهم صل وسلم على محمد وعلى آله في القداد

"O God, send Thy blessings and peace on Muḥammad and on the stature of Muḥammad among all the statures."

In this formula only two words are changed throughout: one is that which is preceded by the second 'Alā, and the other is that which follows the preposition Fi; and the rest of the formula remains unchanged, for instance, the next formula runs:

اللهم صل على محمد وعلى بدن محمد في الابدان

"O God send Thy blessings and peace on Muḥammad and the body of Muḥammad among all the bodies."

Here are some more examples :

اللهم صل وسلم	على محمد	و على	ذات محمد	في الذات
”	”	”	”	في الاوصاف
”	”	”	”	في الذمات
”	”	”	”	في الصدور
”	”	”	”	في الدمام
”	”	”	”	في الاثواب
”	”	”	”	في السرر

This work may be equally taken to serve as a short philological treatise containing words with their broken forms of plural (جمع مكسر) for many things connected and associated with a human being.

The other work is entitled al-Salām al-Mu'arrā (السلام المعرا) and contains formulae of Ṣalāt, composed of undotted letters (بے نقط) only, just as the very title of the book is devoid of dotted letters. The book begins with a brief introduction composed of undotted letters. The Ṣalāt runs as follows :

اللهم صل و سلم على محمد و امام الهدى

اللهم صل و سلم على محمد صدره مطلع الهدى

CHAPTER VI

SCHOLASTIC THEOLOGY

Having dealt so far with those branches of Arabic literature which are exclusively theological and religious, I now turn to that department of Islamic studies which lies midway between religion and philosophy—a department which is a connecting link between the aforesaid two opposite systems of human thought and knowledge: I mean Scholastic Theology, which may, with equal force and significance, be called Philosophical Theology or Theological Philosophy.

Just as there is more than one theory as to the derivation of the term Taşawwuf, similarly there is more than one explanation offered for the origin of the technical term 'Ilm al-Kalām'. But just as in the former case there is only one convincing theory (i.e., the derivation of Taşawwuf from the word Ṣūf), so in the latter case the only correct explanation is that in the earlier days of Islām when Greek philosophy and Islamic doctrines came into contact with each other, Muslim writers used to discuss philosophical problems under the heading al-Kalām fī Kadhā, which way of putting the heading became so common that in course of time it gave the name al-Kalām to that science itself which confines its investigations to the philosophical discussion of the theological doctrines.

After this introductory remark, let us see what India has contributed to this branch of Arabic literature.

108 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

Of the numerous works produced in India, twelve deserve mention. They fall under the following heads :

1. Commentaries on the standard text-books on the Islamic dogmas	2
2. Text-books on the Islamic dogmas	2
3. Commentaries on the standard text-books on Scholastic Theology	...	2
4. Text-books on the same	2
5. Books on Sectarian Controversies		3
6. Scholastic Explanations of the Islamic Aḥkām (injunctions)	1

I. COMMENTARIES ON THE STANDARD BOOKS ON THE ISLAMIC DOGMAS: TWO WORKS

Outside India many text-books on this topic have been written, of which two are, perhaps, the best known: One is al-'Aqā'id al-Nasafiyyah (العقائد النسفية), composed by Najm al-Dīn Abū Ḥafṣ 'Umar b. Muḥammad al-Nasafi (534/1139), and the other, al-'Aqā'id al-Aḥudiyyah (العقائد الحزوديه) of Qādī 'Aḍud al-Dīn 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Aḥmad al-Ījī (756/1355). On the former, Sa'd al-Dīn Mas'ūd b. 'Umar al-Taftāzānī (791/1389) and on the latter, another famous writer, Jalāl al-Dīn Muḥammad b. Sa'd Ullāh al-Dawwānī (907/1501) have written commentaries. Both these texts with their commentaries are widely read, and many super-commentaries and glosses have been written on these commentaries by scholars of later periods. 'Abd al-Ḥakīm al-Siyālkūtī, whom we have met in connection with several books, has written super-commentaries on both the aforesaid commentaries.

In the case of al-'Aqā'id al-Nasafiyyah, his glosses are not directly on Taftāzānī's commentaries but on Mawlā Aḥmad b. Mūsā Khayālī's (860-1456) well-known super-commentary upon which glosses have been composed by several writers. The values of these Indian glosses may be judged from this remark of Ḥājī Khalīfah : وهي احسن الحواشي مقبولة عند الحكماء (It is the best of all the glosses and accepted among the learned.)

In the case of the al-'Aqā'id al-Aḥudiyyah, 'Abd al-Ḥakīm's glosses are directly upon the first commentary on it by Dawwānī. These glosses are also copious and worthy of the author. But Ḥājī Khalīfah does not mention them.

II. TEXT-BOOKS ON DOGMAS : TWO WORKS

(1) Al-'Aqīdat al-Ḥasanah (العتيدة الحسنه), composed by Shāh Walī Ullāh Dihlawī. This is a small tract comprising all the important and essential formulae of the Sunnī creeds and dogmas. The present work is not a mere imitation or reproduction of previous works of the same character. It is composed independently of them and is a sort of digest of Sunnī dogmatics. The creeds being the same, the difference lies in the arrangement and exposition and slightly in principles also. Shāh Walī Ullāh's work is more lucid and less technical and philosophical than the 'Aqā'id al-Nasafiyyah and the 'Aqā'id al-Aḥudiyyah. It is briefer also. The beginnings of both the last-mentioned

'*Aqā'id*s are philosophical. They start with the various ways of acquiring knowledge and with the Hudūth of the world. They say: العالم بجميع اجزائه محدث (i.e., the world with all its parts is a thing created) and then by a logical syllogism conclude that for the created there must be a creator. Shāh Walī Ullāh, on the other hand, commences his treatise in a rather sentimental way, saying:

اشهد الله ومن حضر من الملائكة والجن والانسان الى اعتقد من صميم
قلبي ان للعالم صانعاً قديماً . . .

(I call upon God and those who are present from amongst angels, genii and men to bear witness that I believe from the core of my heart that for the world there is a Creator eternal . . .)

He asserts from the outset that there is a Maker of the world who is such and such. While mentioning all the attributes of God, he distinguishes between the ultimate and the immediate causes by saying that none but God cures the ill, none but He gives bread—in this sense that He says to a thing non-existing, Kun (come into existence) and it comes at once into existence, and not in the sense in which we say that a physician has cured a patient.

With regard to the Caliphate, all of them are in agreement as to the rightfulness of the first four Caliphs and to their order of succession, but there is a little difference as regards the Afdaliyyat (superiority) of the Caliphs to one another. Nasafī holds that the order of superiority follows that of their succession. Shāh Walī Ullāh says: افضل الناس بعد رسول الله ابو بكر ثم عمر (The best of the men after the Prophet is Abū Bakr and then 'Umar), and does not go further, and say nothing about 'Uthmān and 'Alī. The fact is that the superiority of 'Uthmān to 'Alī is not so evident and certain as that of the first two over the last two, and so there is a controversy as to whether 'Uthmān or 'Alī is to have preference over the other. Shāh Walī Ullāh has mentioned the most reliable part of the creed and has left the doubtful part untouched. The question of Afdaliyyat is so vital to Shāh Walī Ullāh that he thought it necessary to explain what he meant by Afdaliyyat. He says: "We do not mean 'superiority' from every point of view, including lineage and bravery, etc., but on the other hand we take it from the standpoint of utility to Islām, that is to say, Afdal means one who has been most useful and serviceable to Islām."

(2) The other work of the nature under consideration is Mizān al-'Aqā'id (ميزان العقائد), written by Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz, son of Shāh Walī Ullāh. Like his father, Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz was a distinguished scholar, and the author of several works. He died in 1139/1726. The present work is brief but at the same time comprehensive. It has been written after the old fashion of composing a concise text-book requiring a long array of commentaries and glosses. It is so condensed that even the author himself has written a commentary on it. So this text is followed by a commentary on it by the same writer. It is divided into three sections. The first section deals with beliefs about God, the second with matters relating to prophets, and the third contains eschatological discussions. While adopting a theory mid-way between Jabr (Determinism or Fatalism) and Qadr (Indeterminism or free-will), he has given an interesting instance illustrating thereby the Ash'arite theory of the fate and free-will. He says that a man has got freedom as to his actions : he may sit down or stand up ; may sleep or remain awake as he chooses, but لا اختيار له في ذلك الاختيار (he has no further choice in this choice). A man may not intend throwing a stone but when he has actually applied any amount of force in throwing it, he is unable to check the necessary consequences.

III. COMMENTARIES ON THE STANDARD BOOKS ON SCHOLASTIC THEOLOGY PROPER : TWO WORKS

'Aḍud al-Dīn al-Ījī's (756/1355) book on 'Ilm al-Kalām, entitled Mawāqif, is one of the best Arabic text-books, upon which the distinguished scholar Sayyid Sharīf 'Alī b. Muhammad Jurjānī (816/1413) has written a commentary, known as Sharḥ al-Mawāqif, which like the commentaries on the 'Aqā'id has served as the basis of a large number of super-commentaries, glosses and super-glosses.

The first Indian scholar to write a super-commentary was 'Abd al-Ḥakīm of Siālkūt whose name and fame as a commentator is a sufficient guarantee for the merit of this commentary.

The other Indian scholar who wrote another super-commentary on the same work is Mīr Zāhid (1101/1689), a distinguished author of high philosophical attainments, who enjoyed the patronage of Awrangzīb and held the responsible post of Ṣadr at Kābul. Of his super-commentary, the portion relating to the second Mawqif (section) on al-Umūr al-‘Āmmah has held so high a position in the ranks of scholastic literature in India that from the time of the author up to quite recent times it has been almost a fashion for each philosophical scholar to write glosses on it. Some idea of these glosses may be gained from the list given in the appendix.

IV. TEXT-BOOKS ON SCHOLASTIC THEOLOGY : TWO WORKS

(1) Al-Risālat al-Khāqāniyyah (الرسالة الخاقانية), also entitled al-Durr al-Thamīn (الدر الثمين). It is a tract on the scholastic investigation with regard to the problem of the knowledge of God, composed by ‘Abd al-Hakīm of Siālkot who dedicated it to his royal patron Shāh Jahān. It is divided into two sections. The first is on God’s knowledge, and contains three discussions. The first discussion is في ادبات علم الله تعالى (on proving the knowledge of God). He says that God’s knowledge is accepted by all except a few ancient philosophers who denied it on the ground that just as the sun radiates its rays without being conscious of so doing, so God is the Creator of all creatures without having any knowledge of them. ‘Abd al-Hakīm gives to this strange belief of the ancient philosophers a convincing reply, saying that if God is not knowing, then He must be ignorant—a thing which nobody will accept.

Another objection brought by them against the knowledge of God is that knowledge is a relation which presupposes a plurality of things, that is to say, there should be at least two things, viz., one knowing and the other known. If God is knowing, He must know Himself, which means knowledge of Himself, and this is absurd, as knowledge is a relation only conceivable between two things. 'Abd al-Hakīm refutes this objection in two ways. In the first place, 'Ilm (knowledge) is not a relation but صفة ذات نسبه (an attribute having relation). Secondly, if 'Ilm is regarded as a Nisbah, even then there is no difficulty, for one thing may be both subjective and objective.

The second discussion relates to the nature of God's knowledge. God's knowledge, says he, is either identified with His Being or is something different. If something different, it either stands by itself or by the Personality of God. Ancient philosophers generally hold that God's knowledge is exactly identified with His Personality, while the Ash'arites believe that it is other than God's Being but is dependent upon it.

The third discussion is confined to the problems concerning the universality of God's knowledge. He holds that God knows both the universal and the particular.

In the second section the author deals with the Takfir (accusing of infidelity) of philosophers. He quotes and explains the opinion of al-Ghazālī who has declared that there are twenty problems in which the philosophers differ from Muslims, out of which the following three problems make them Kāfir:

- (1) Their belief in the eternity of the world ;
- (2) Their denial of the resurrection of the body ;
- (3) Their holding that God knows the universal and not the particular.

This tract is interesting and lucid in its manner of discussing the subject.

(2) The next Indian book on ʿIlm al-Kalām is Baḥr al-Madhāhib (بحر المذاهب), composed by Shaykh ʿAbd al-Wahhāb, entitled Munʿim Khān of Qannawj, who dedicated it to Awrangzīb, to whose court he was attached. This work is on the line of the Mawāqif, with this difference, that the Baḥr al-Madhāhib covers the scope of the last three sections of the Mawāqif. In his introduction, the author gives a long list of those works by the help of which he has written this book, and explains the technical terms of scholastic theology. As to the rest, it is a reproduction of what the standard books such as the Mawāqif and its commentary contain, with some additional problems not dealt with by the Mawāqif. The style is easier and less complicated than that of the Mawāqif and Sharḥ al-Mawāqif. It may advantageously be read as an introduction to scholastic theology.

V. SECTARIAN CONTROVERSIES : THREE WORKS

(1) Al-Muqaddimat al-Saniyyah fī Intiṣār al-Firqat al-Sunniyyah (المقدمة السنية في انتصار الفرق السنية), originally composed in Persian by Shaykh Aḥmad Fāruqī known as "Mujaddid-i-Alf-i-Thānī," one of the greatest Ṣūfis India ever produced, and translated into Arabic by a great Indian theologian of equal eminence, Shāh Walī Ullāh, at the request of the scholars of the Ḥijāz when the translator, in the course of a talk on the Sunnī and Shīʿite controversies, referred to the original text.

The learned translator did not confine himself to a mere translation but has also added useful explanatory and critical notes here and there—which fact has made the work still more valuable. He has also differed in several places from the original author, and has pointed out his mistakes. Shāh Walī Ullāh has given a critical account of the author's merits and attainments and of the services he rendered to the cause of bridging over the gulf between Sūfism and orthodoxy. The translator, while criticising the heretical characteristics of the time of Akbar and his son, Jahāngīr, remarks that it is curious to note that just as this period of Indian history produced a good deal of heresy and irreligiousness, on the other hand it turned out a large number of Sūfīs and learned men, of whom he has given a short list. Among the former (Sūfīs), he mentions Khwājah Muhammad Bāqī, Shaykh 'Abd al Quddūs, Shaykh Muhammad Ghawīh of Gwalior, and Shaykh Ahmad, and among the latter (learned men) he gives the names of Shaykh 'Abd al-Haqq, 'Abd al-Nabī, Makhdūm al-Mulk, and Mullā 'Abd al-Qādir Badā'ūnī. This treatise, Arabicised and enlarged, has been further annotated by the translator's son, Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz, who in his turn differs in places from his father and agrees with the original author.

(2) Another work of exactly the same nature is the Radd al-Shī'ah (رد الشیعه) by Mullā Muhammad Muḥsin who was one of the eminent scholars of Kashmīr and well versed in philosophy and theology. He died in 1119/1707. This work is one of the best books ever written on the Sunnī and Shī'ī controversies from the Sunnī standpoint. Some of the arguments contained in the book may be given here:

(a) Had 'Alī been a Ma'sūm (infallible) Imām, he would not have committed errors in giving Fatwās. Here the author enumerates some of his errors, one of which is that he allowed the sale of Umm Walad, a woman slave who had given birth to a child.

(b) Some of those Ṣaḥābah and Tābi'ūn who were among his party did not agree with some of his decisions, e g., when 'Alī ordered some of the Khārijites to be burnt, Ibn 'Abbās remarked: "I would not have done that, had I been in his place."

(c) Had he been a Manṣūb (Divinely appointed) Imām, the Prophet would not have asked Abū Bakr to lead the prayers during his illness.

(d) If he was the rightful successor, why did he not take allegiance from 'Abbās and Abū Sufyān, who were ready to give it?

(e) Supposing Abū Bakr and 'Umar were usurpers, was it not unlawful for a Manṣūb Imām to co-operate with them, to share the booty, and to enjoy other privileges? Why did he acknowledge them as Caliphs? He should have gone to some other country, as did Sa'd who did not swear allegiance to them but migrated to Syria. Even a humble Ṣaḥābī such as Bilāl did not recognise them. Why did 'Alī, so well-known for bravery and valour, fear them? If he practised Taqīyyah (pious fraud or subterfuge), why did not Ḥusayn do the same? One of them must be wrong.

(f) Had he been a Manṣūb Imām, he would not have consented to be a member of the council appointed by 'Umar to select his successor from amongst them, because the appointment of this council clearly implies that there was no Manṣūb Imām. When 'Alī agreed to be a member of it, he ipso facto accepted the underlying principle of the council.

(g) Just as a prophet cannot abandon his claim to be such, similarly a Maṣṣūb Imām cannot do so.

(h) If he had positive proofs (Nuṣūṣ) for his being a Maṣṣūb Imām, he would certainly have shown them to the people.

(i) If 'Umar was an usurper and so Mardūd (rejected), (God forbid), why did 'Alī marry his daughter to him?

(3) Several books have been written in India on this topic from the Shī'ī standpoint, but the present writer has failed to find any except one representing the Shī'ī view not, however, dealing with the Shī'ī and Sunnī controversies but with Ṣūfīism. It is al-Shihāb al-Thāqib (الشهاب الثاقب) by Sayyid Dildār 'Alī who was a Shī'ī Mujaṭṭahid and a distinguished scholar in his time, and the author of several books. He died in 1235/1819. The present book was written in refutation and rejection of Ṣūfīism. It contains an introduction and four sections called Maqṣad (plu. Maqāṣid) of various lengths, being further divided into chapters and sub-chapters, almost according to the same plan as that adopted in the Mawāqif.

In the introduction the author confines himself to the discussion of the thesis that existence is a self-evident truth which requires no further proof.

The first Maqṣad, divided into eight chapters, deals with problems concerning the unity and plurality of existence and the Being of God. The author repudiates the pantheistic theory of the Ṣūfīs. This section is wholly scholastic and philosophical. The second Maqṣad, divided into six chapters, is devoted to the traditional treatment of the question. The third Maqṣad with its seven chapters dwells upon Kashf (revelation), one full chapter, further divided into eleven sub chapters, is confined to finding fault with eleven eminent Ṣūfīs, Ibn 'Arabī, Ḥasan Baṣrī, Abū Sufyān Thawrī, Abū Yazīd al-Bisṭāmī, Ibrāhīm b. Adham, Ḥusayn b. Maṣṣūr, al-Ḡhazālī, 'Abd al-Qādir al-Jilānī, Jalāl al-Dīn Rūmī, Farīd al-Dīn, 'Aṭṭār, and Ḥakīm Sanā'ī.

His whole argument is that if they had been real saints they would not have committed blunders and follies.

The fourth Maqṣad is comparatively short and is a sort of an apology for a doubt or objection that may be raised against his theory that if Kashf had been something true and real, there would have been no difference in such revealed matters. The objection brought against this theory is that such differences are possible in the process of thinking also, to which he replies that in thinking there is still some standard or criterion to which one may refer, but in Kashf even such a standard is not possible.

The chief aim of the book is to refute the theory of Waḥdat al-Wujūd, in doing which he may be successful, but by the way it refutes Ṣūfīism also. In this respect, it is a failure. The author has succeeded in proving neither by traditions nor by reason the absurdity of Ṣūfīism. His chief point against these eleven Ṣūfīs whom he has condemned is that they were not Shī'ah and so cannot be right. Among them the author says of Hakīm Sanā'ī only that according to some he was a Shī'ah. About Hasan Baṣrī he remarks that he has been called the Sāmīrī of his age by 'Alī.

VI. SCHOLASTIC EXPLANATIONS OF THE ISLAMIC COMMANDS AND PROHIBITIONS: ONE WORK

Under this heading one work deserves notice. It is Hujjat Ullāh al-Bālighah (حجّة الله البالغة) which has been briefly discussed under the category of books on Ḥadīth. But as this book is rather in the nature of scholastic theology than Ḥadīth, a fuller account may not be out of place here.

Mawlānā Shibli,¹ one of the great modern Indian critics, puts Shāh Walī Ullāh, the author of the book, in the third period of the Islamic scholastic theology, along with two great scholars, Ibn Rushd (595/1198) and Ibn Taymiyyah (728/1327). Shāh Walī Ullāh has not written any book exclusively on scholastic theology, and so outwardly it does not seem proper to reckon him among scholastic theologians. But his Hujjat Ullāh al-Bālighah, in which he explains the Islamic injunctions, is in the true spirit of scholastic theology. The object of this Islamic science is to prove the truth of the Islamic faith and religion. Now a religion consists of two parts: beliefs and injunctions. All the books that had been written hitherto on scholastic theology dwelt on the first part of the religion, i.e., beliefs and creeds, and did not touch the other part at all. Shāh Walī Ullāh was the first author to write a book on this topic. While mentioning the advantages to be gained from his book, he states in his introduction that just as the Prophet was given the miracle of the Qur'ān, the like of which could never be produced by Arabs or non-Arabs, similarly the religion that he was given was also a miracle, because to bring forth a religion which may be perfect in every way is also beyond human power. He states further that just as many books have been written about the Qur'ān being a miracle, similarly there should also be books dealing with the miraculous nature of that religion. Then he adds that there are persons who think that many Islamic injunctions are irrational. For instance, they say that tortures in the grave, the judgment, the bridge, the scale, etc., have nothing to do with rationality. Similarly it may be said that it is absurd that the fasting of the month of Ramaḍān is incumbent while fasting on the first day of the next month is unlawful. Again, what is related by way of inducements and warnings is also foolish. The author says that in order to meet all these objections and doubts it is necessary to prove the rationality of all these things. These two objectives of his book, that is, to discuss the miraculous nature of the Islamic religion and to prove the rationality of the Islamic injunctions, form the most important part of scholastic theology. This is the reason why the Hujjat Ullāh al-Bālighah may be regarded as a treatise on the above-mentioned science.

Those important problems scholastic theology on which the author has dwelt in his book are as follows :

1. The reason why man has been created responsible.
2. There is no change or break in God's habit or nature.

3. The reality of the soul.
4. The reality of reward and punishment.
5. The reality of matters relating to the resurrection and the next world.
6. 'Ālam al-Mithāl.
7. The reality of Nubuwwat (Prophecy).
8. The origin of all religions is the same.
9. The reason why God brought religion into existence.
10. The necessity for a religion cancelling all the previous ones.

'Ālam al-Mithāl is the most important doctrine of his philosophy. There are many Hadīth which indicate that in this universe there is another world which is not material and in which things appear before they come into existence in this world. This new world is called 'Ālam al-Mithāl. He has given many Hadīth of this type, some of which may be quoted here to show their nature :

1. The Qur'ānic Sūrahs al-Baqarah and āl-'Imrān (II, III) will appear on the Day of Judgment in the form of a cloud.
2. On the Day of Judgment, actions will present themselves. The prayers will come first of all, and then almsgiving, and then fasting.
3. I see tumults raining upon your houses.

After mentioning many Hadīth of this type, he says that about these events there may be three views :

- (1) Either to take them literally ; then one has to believe in 'Ālam al-Mithāl ;
- (2) One may think that they are made to appear like that, while in reality they are not so ; or
- (3) They are to be taken allegorically.

Shāh Walī Ullāh does not reckon those who hold the third view among Ahl al-Haqq. He has so considerably enlarged the scope of this 'Ālam al-Mithāl' that things such as the Prophet's seeing Gabriel, angels visiting the dead in their graves, etc., have been put in this 'Ālam al-Mithāl'. Shiblī remarks that if the author's explanation of these Ḥadīth be accepted by other theologians, there remains little or no difference between religion and philosophy. But the writer of the present thesis does not agree with the Shāh on this point. The first objection is that in order to explain away the irrationality of some statements made in Ḥadīth, he has to believe in the existence of a world which is not supported by our ordinary experience ; or the argument for the existence of this new world may be said to be arguing in a vicious circle ; he believes in 'Ālam al-Mithāl' because these Ḥadīth contain statements which necessitate this belief, and these statements are true because there is an 'Ālam al-Mithāl'. Secondly, I cannot understand how this Ḥadīth, for instance, that Sūrah al-Baqarah and āl-'Imrān will appear in the form of a cloud on the Day of Judgment, can be explained by his theory of 'Ālam al-Mithāl'. What is the relation between a thing in the 'Ālam al-Mithāl' and the same thing in the physical world ? I mean to say that if the Sūrah al-Baqarah and the Sūrah āl-'Imrān are like a cloud in Ālam al-Mithāl, what are they like in the actual world, and what is the relation between the two? I also do not see what objection there is to these Ḥadith being taken allegorically.

This theory of Ālam al-Mithāl is not altogether a new one. It may be compared to the Ālam Ashbāh of Shaykh al-Iṣṭraq Shihāb al-Dīn and the Tamthīl-i-K'ayālī of al-Ghazālī, according to whom existence is of four kinds: Dhātī, Hissī, Khayālī, and Aqlī.

The literature on Islamic scholastic theology, available in the time of the author and studied by him, consisted of the works of the later Ash'arites only. Being a man of somewhat independent thinking and some originality, he generally differed from them in many matters. Some of his own new arguments and explanations may be given here.

(1) One of the defects of Ilm al-Kalām was that it made no attempt to meet the objections raised by the opponents against the Qur'ān. Books like the Mawāqif, etc., deal with the objections regarding the eloquence of the Qur'ān but contain nothing on the objections concerning the subject-matter of the Qur'ān. Some commentators have replied to them, but their answers are not satisfactory. They have, for instance, said in reply to the objection brought against the repetition of matters in the Qur'ān, that the object is to show command over the language. What an absurd reply! To express one idea in so many ways may be a credit to a human being—to scholars like Harīrī and others—but not to God. Shāh Walī Ullāh has dealt with this problem in a new way. Teaching, says he, is of two kinds; one is mere teaching and nothing more, i.e., a teaching the object of which is to let the hearer know what he does not know; and the other teaching is an efficient one, i.e., to teach a thing in such a way that it is not only brought home to the hearer but it also makes him take great pleasure and delight in it, and this efficient teaching is achieved by repetition of the matter in different expressions.

(2) His reply to the objections brought against the Qur'ān of lacking any kind of arrangement or order, has already been mentioned in connection with his book Uṣūl al-Tafsīr.

(3) One of the objections put forward against the Qur'ān is that in many places grammatical rules are broken. His reply is that the ancient Arabs of al-Jāhiliyyah, while making speeches, used to employ ungrammatical expressions, but as these ungrammatical expressions were used by genuine Arabs, they were regarded as accurate idioms. The Qur'ān has followed these idioms, which may be ungrammatical, i.e., not agreeing with grammar systematised later on, but not incorrect or unidiomatic.

(4) All scholars hitherto have regarded the Qur'ān as a miracle from the standpoint of the elegance of the style, but it was the Shāh who asserted that the great miracle of the Qur'ān is that its teaching about morals, the purification of the soul, the Oneness of God, the prophetic office, and the next world is beyond human power to conceive.

(5) He holds that the universe is subject to a law or laws which are never broken.

(6) About miracles he says that they are matters produced by natural causes, the only difference between them and ordinary events being that in the former case perfection is predominant. Contrary to the Ash'arites, he holds that miracles and the acceptance of prayers by God and the like are outside the reality of the prophetic office, although they are associated with it in most cases.

CHAPTER VII

PHILOSOPHY

Having dealt with the contribution of India to Scholastic literature in Arabic, we will now consider what she has contributed to philosophy in the same language. Philosophy is the only non-theological subject in which Indian scholars writing in Arabic have taken much interest—an interest which is next to that manifested by them in religious studies. Though many a book has been written on this subject in India, yet we must not expect anything quite new and different from what had been achieved in that direction outside India. As already pointed out more than once, Arabic books written in India date from the eleventh century of the Christian era, when Arabic learning had reached a limit beyond which it failed to progress further. Since that century the activities of the Muslim world have been largely confined to the making of commentaries and the reproduction of old materials. Moreover, it must also be borne in mind that philosophy is a subject in which even the early Muslim scholars in the centres of Islamic learning achieved nothing original. De Boer is right when he says that “Muslim philosophy has always continued to be an eclecticism which depended on their stock of works translated from Greek. The course of its history has been a process of assimilation rather than of generation. It has not distinguished itself either by propounding new problems or by any peculiarity in its endeavour to solve the old ones." To this remark I may add that if scholastic theology be included in philosophy, then it may be said that the Muslim scholars have somewhat tried to solve some old problems under the guidance of their creeds and dogmas, in ways different from those of the Greek philosophers. I have deliberately used the word "somewhat", because even scholastic theologians have taken food for their arguing from Greek philosophy. They have accepted all those doctrines and thoughts which fitted in with their creed, and with the help of the arguments for those doctrines, they have tried to refute those philosophical conclusions which were opposed to their religion. Muslim scholastic theology is largely taken up with the refutation of certain doctrines of Greek philosophy from the standpoint of Islamic orthodoxy. Anyhow, when Muslim philosophers like Kindī, Fārābī, Ibn Miskawayh, Ibn Sīnā and Ibn Ruḥd produced so little that is original, how can anything new be expected from Arabic writers in India? If Fārābī and Ibn Sīnā have expounded the philosophy of the Greek philosophers in their writings, Indian authors have only performed a similar service for a later generation in India.

The Indian scholars have shown greater and keener interest in the study of logic than in physics and metaphysics. I think that Muslim logicians have added something to that knowledge of logic which they learnt from the Greek. As far as is known to me, no effort has been made as yet to compare the logic of the Muslims with that of the Greeks, starting with a comparison between the Arabic translation of Aristotle's Organon and the Greek text in order to find the original significance of the terms and how their meaning was changed in course of time, and then tracing the gradual development of Arabian logic in order to discover what new contribution the Muslim logicians made to Aristotle's logic.

The hold of logic on the minds of the Muslim thinkers has been so strong that whatever problems they may discuss they do so in an exact and logical manner. To illustrate what I mean, I may give here an instance. To take the problem whether or not there is a God, a Muslim philosophical writer will argue in the following way, taking all the possibilities into consideration :

There is either a God or no God. If there is a God, He may be one or more than one. If more than one, they are either independent of each other or not. In the same way he will take all possibilities into consideration in case there is no God. And then he will start discussion and examination from the bottom upwards, eliminating and rejecting what is absurd to him, and thus finally proving what he holds to be the true solution of the problem.

The contribution of India to the philosophical section of Arabic literature is so considerable that a separate treatise might be written on this subject. Therefore before I discuss the contribution of India to philosophic thought, I propose to give here a short account of the writers themselves.

The first great scholar of high philosophical attainments who promoted the study of philosophy in India was 'Abdullāh of Tulunba, a village in Multan. He ✓ left his native place for Delhi in the reign of Sikandar Lūdī and settled there. The king had a great respect for his learning and used to attend his lectures, taking a seat unnoticed in a corner of the lecture-room so that the class might not be disturbed. He is the first Indian author who wrote on philosophy. He compiled a commentary entitled Badī' al-Mizān on a logical treatise known as Mizān al-Manṭiq. This commentary with the text is still widely read by the students of logic in India.

Then comes the famous Mullā Maḥmūd of Jawnpūr (1062/1651), after whose death his learned teacher Muḥammad Afdal smiled no more. The shock was so great that he survived his pupil only for forty days. Maḥmūd was an eminent scholar in his time and was a contemporary of two other equally distinguished men of letters, one 'Abd al-Rashīd (1083/1672) Jawnpūrī, and the other 'Abd al-Ḥakīm of Siālkot. Maḥmūd is the author of several works of which al-Ḥikmat al-Bālighah with a commentary by the same author entitled al-Shams al-Bāzighah and al-Dawḥah are well-known. 'Abd al-Rashīd wrote a commentary entitled al-Rashīdiyyah on Sayyid Sharīf Jurjānī's treatise on dialectics. This commentary is still widely studied in India. 'Abd al-Ḥakīm of Siālkot also wrote several commentaries on the text-books of philosophy.

These scholars were followed by Mīr Muḥammad Zāhid, son of Qādī Muḥammad Aslam (1101/1689) and the famous Muḥibb Ullāh of Bihār (1119/1707). The former was a scholar noted for high philosophical attainments. He was first attached to the court of Shāh Jahān and after his death to that of his successor.

He wrote three glosses on three standard books, viz., on the Sharḥ al-Mawāqif referred to in the last chapter, the Sharḥ al-Tahdhīb and the Risālat al-Quṭbiyyah. The two last works will be discussed later on. All these three sets of glosses are generally known as al-Hawāshī al-Thalāth al-Zāhidiyyah (الحواشي الثلاثة الزاهدية).

Qādī Muḥibb Ullāh of Bihār, as we have seen in the Fiqh section of this book, was the author of three works, one on the principles of Fiqh, entitled Musallam al-Thubūt, discussed already, the second on logic, Sullam al-'Ulūm, and the third small treatise on a philosophical problem, al-Jawāhar al-Fard. All these works are highly esteemed in India, and the Sullam has long been accepted as a standard work upon which no less than half a dozen eminent scholars have written independent commentaries

From what has been said above, it will be clear that before the advent of the Mughals in India there was only one scholar, namely, 'Abdullāh, who was especially interested in philosophic studies. But it was during the Mughal period that several eminent scholars of philosophical attainments flourished. The courts of Shāh Jahān and 'Ālamgīr especially proved to be a magnet to attract scholars. During the decline of this dynasty we find that the states of Rāmpūr and Lucknow extended patronage to men of letters. Here a respectable and learned family of Khayrābād deserves notice. Of this family three generations, the grandfather, the father and the son, were noted for their abilities in philosophic learning. The grandfather was Faḍl Imām (1243/1827) who wrote a text-book on logic entitled Mirqāt and a commentary entitled Tashhīdh al-Adhḥān on the Badi' al-Mizān mentioned above. His son, Faḍl al-Ḥaqq, was a great scholar. He wrote a text-book on physics entitled al-Ḥadiyyat al-Sa'idiyyah; which he dedicated to Sa'id al-Dīn Khān, Nawwāb of Rāmpūr, to whose court he was attached. His son, 'Abd al-Ḥaqq, was also an eminent scholar noted for philosophical attainments. His commentary on the well-known text-book on philosophy, entitled Hidāyat al-Ḥikmah, is still appreciated in India.

Besides them, Qāḍī Mubārak, Ḥamd Ullāh, Aḥmad 'Alī, Muḥammad Mubīn, Mullā Ḥasan, Baḥr al-'Ulūm and other scholars known as Ulamā'-i-Farangī Maḥall have been logicians of reputation in India. But it is a matter of regret that none of these scholars deviated from the beaten track of the old philosophy. They did not aspire to do more than write commentaries on the system of logic devised by Ibn Sīnā, with merely slight and verbal differences here and there. Their philosophy was confined to the exposition of what had already been said by Ibn Sīnā whom they call al-Shaykh.

No branch of learning was so much misused in India as were grammar and logic. For the former they sacrificed the study of pure literature for which the study of grammar serves but as a means. Similarly they studied logic for its own sake, though it was originally intended to serve as an instrument for the acquisition of knowledge. Their merely verbal and technical discussions have won them a bad reputation in India, and many stories are current which reveal the attitude of the public towards the logicians. One or two may not be out of place here.

Once a father and a son sat together to take their food. There was, among other things, only one egg, meant for both. "What are you learning these days?" asked the father. "Logic," was the reply. "What is that?" the father continued. "It is a science," rejoined the youth, "by which I can prove that this one egg is two." "Do, please!" said the father eagerly, whereupon the son began to prove his contention by processes of logic which were, of course, unintelligible to his father, concluding his speech by saying, "Therefore, this egg is two." "I am very glad," said his father, "that you have proved the existence of two eggs in this dish. I shall take this, and you can take the other one."

The other story is that a student of logic, on his way to school, came across the old-fashioned oil-pressing machine worked by an ox. He stopped there for a while, and having observed the whole construction of the machine, approached the owner who was sitting on one side, and said to him, "I have been able to understand the use and purpose of all the parts of the machine, but I cannot comprehend why you have hung a bell around the neck of the ox." "So that," replied the man, "I may know while sitting here that the ox is moving." "But," rejoined the young logician, "the animal may keep his neck moving instead, while he himself is standing still." Whereupon, the machine-man, realising that the young enquirer was a logician, dismissed the matter by simply saying that his ox was not a logician.

Now I propose to give a detailed account of the contribution of India to the philosophical section of

I. COMMENTARIES ON THE STANDARD TEXT-BOOKS ON DIALECTICS: TWO WORKS

On dialectics there are two well-known text-books ; on is al-Risālat al-‘Aḍudhiyyah (الرسالة العظمية), composed by ‘Aḍud al-Dīn ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Aḥmad al-Ījī (756/1355) and the other, ‘al-Ādāb al-Sharīfiyyah (الاداب الشريفية) of al-Sayyid al-Sharīf ‘Alī b. Muḥammad Jurjānī (816/1413). On the former two Indian scholars have written commentaries : one is Nūr al-Dīn Aḥmadābādī (1150/1737), and the other ‘Abd al-Hayy, a much later prolific writer of Lucknow (1304/1886). His commentary, entitled al-Hadiyyat al-Mukhtāriyyah, is copious and has almost surpassed all previous works of the same character, as the commentator incorporated them in his work ; but as the author does not properly belong to the period covered by the present thesis, I need not say anything more about his work.

The treatise on dialectics by al-Sayyid al-Sharīf al-Jurjānī, being more detailed and elaborate than that of ‘Aḍud al-Dīn, has been much more commonly used. Upon this text two contemporary Indian scholars wrote commentaries: one commentary is entitled al-Ādāb al-Bāqiyyah (الاداب الباقيه), composed by ‘Abd al-Bāqī (1084/1673), and the other is al-Ādāb al-Rashīdiyyah (الاداب الرشيديه), by a great scholar, ‘Abd al-Rashīd of Jawnpūr (1083/1672), who was noted for his vast learning and piety. When the emperor Shāh-jahān heard of his high qualifications, he sent him an invitation. But ‘Abd al-Rashīd did not accept it. His commentary, being more detailed and copious than the other one, attracts a greater degree of attention than the former.

This commentary contains an introduction, nine discourses, and an appendix. The introduction deals with the definitions of all the terms of this science. Munāẓarah (dialectics) is defined as a discussion between two rivals on a certain topic for the purpose of arriving at the truth. According to this definition a discourse is said to be ‘Illat Šūriyyah (formal cause); opponents, ‘Illat Fā’iliyyah (active cause); the topic, ‘Illat Maddīyah (material cause); and lastly, seeking the truth, 'Illat Ghā'iyyah (final cause). The commentator lays much emphasis on the last, the absence of which changes Munāẓarah into Mujādah or Mukābarah (a dispute for supremacy).

The gist of the first discourse of the book is that if a man, called Mudda'i (assertor), makes an assertion with which another man, called Sā'il (enquirer), does not agree, the latter will demand proof, saying, "I do not admit what you say," whereupon the assertor will submit his arguments. This demand of proof is technically called Man'. The opponent (i.e., the enquirer) can either reject it on account of some logical fault (this way of refutation being called Naqd) or oppose it with a counter argument, saying "I have an argument which proves the contrary," (this way of rejection being called Mu'araḍah). His argument being opposed by the opponent, the original assertor now assumes the position of an opponent (Sā'il), and the original Sā'il becomes an assertor (Mudda'i). This process of the exchange of their respective positions will go on for some time until the truth is arrived at.

The second discourse says that before a debate is started, each word in the assertion should be clearly defined, in order to avoid misunderstanding and ambiguity. This definition is also subject to the above-mentioned ways of opposition, viz., Man', Naqd, and Mu'araḍah. But to demand definition for those words which both parties understand well does not become a proper Munāẓarah.

The third discourse deals with quotations. References may be demanded for quotations, provided that the enquirer does not know them, otherwise it becomes Mujādalāh instead of Munāẓarah.

The next four discourses dwell elaborately and individually upon the detailed explanations of Man', Naqd, and Mu'āraḍah.

The eighth discourse discusses how an assertor becomes an opponent and vice versa. The ninth discourse directs the reader not to argue if the assertor or the opponent, as the case may be, is not serious in the debate, and is intentionally committing a fallacy.

II. BOOKS ON PHILOSOPHY PROPER :

(A) TEXT-BOOKS : FOUR

(1) Al-Dawḥat al-Mayyādah fī Ḥaḍīqat al-Ṣūrah wa'l-Māddah (الدوحة المياده في حديقته الصوره و الماده), a treatise on the discussion of "form and matter" by Mullā Maḥmūd of Jawnpūr mentioned above. In this treatise he says that all thinkers agree that in a physical body there is something which admits of changes. There is a good deal of controversy as to what that thing is. Al-Ḥukamā' al-Ishrāqiyyūn (the intuitionists) hold that it is the very essence of a body (Nafs al-Jism). Scholastic theologians are of the opinion that it is the indivisible part (al-Juz' lā Yatajazzā) of the body, while al-Ḥukamā' al-Mashshā'ūn (peripatetic philosophers) advance this theory that every physical body is composed of two essential and inseparable things : one is matter (Hayūlā) and the other is form (Ṣūrah). No form without matter and no matter without form. The author supports this theory and refutes others.

(2) Al-Hikmat al-Bālighah (الحكمة البالغة), by the same author. This book was meant to cover all the branches of philosophy, logic, physics and metaphysics, but as the author commenced it during his last illness, only two out of six or eight sections of physics were completed, and the other two branches of philosophy, viz., logic, and metaphysics, remained untouched. The author also wrote upon it a commentary entitled al-Shams al-Bāzighah (الشمس البازغة), which will be noticed again later on. Both the text and the commentary are widely studied by the students of Arabic in India.

(3) Al-Jawhar al-Fard (الجوهر الفرد), by Muḥibb Ullāh of Bihār, whom we have known as the author of the Musallam al-Thubūt. In this tract the author deals with Juz' lā Yatajazzā (indivisible part), also called al-Jawhar al-Fard. This work is almost on the same line as the Dawḥat al-Mayyādah by Mullā Maḥmūd, with this difference, that the scope of the latter is a little wider, as it deals with both form and matter, while the Jawhar al-Fard is confined to the discussions concerning the indivisible part only. About the divisibility and indivisibility of an ultimate part there are four theories. The majority of the scholastic theologians hold that a body is composed of limited, i.e., further indivisible parts, which are actually present in it; while Abu'l-Fath Shahrastānī, the author of the Kitābu'l-Milal wa'l-Niḥal, differs from the above opinion in denying the actual presence of the indivisible parts in a whole, but holds that they are only there potentially. The third theory is that a body is composed of unlimited (i.e., always divisible) parts which are actually present in the whole. This doctrine is advocated by Nazẓām al-Mu'tazilī. The fourth theory supports the potential presence rather than the actual presence of unlimited parts. This theory is held by the majority of Muslim philosophers and by some scholastic theologians of philosophical tendencies also.

The author simply reproduces all the arguments used by previous writers. There is hardly anything new, except the style and the way of exposition, and the fact that he has collected all the arguments given by different authors in one place. Of all the four theories, he is active in refuting the theory of al-Jawhar al-Fard held by the scholastic theologians. He has given several mathematical proofs in refutation of this theory. One or two may be given here to show their nature.

(1) Every line can be divided into two or three equal parts. If one line consists of one or three so-called indivisible atoms, its division into half means the further breaking up of the middle atom.

(2) According to the 39th theorem of Euclid, the square on the hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle is equal to the sum on the squares on the remaining two sides. If one atom is one unit long and one unit wide, the hypotenuse will be greater than one and less than two units, which means that an atom is to be further broken up.

(3) If you draw a circle on a so-called indivisible atom, it will touch the four sides of the atom on four points only, and the rest of the circle will run inside the atom, dividing it further.

One or two arguments of the holders of the opposite view may also be given here. Their chief argument is that if a straight line is drawn touching a circle, they will meet each other at a point only which is the ultimate part of the circle or the line, and cannot be divided further, as a point has no capacity for division.

The other argument advanced by them runs like this: If you say that a mountain has unlimited atoms just as a small grain has, then why is the mountain so much bigger than a grain, although both of them are composed of unlimited atoms?

It is a curious thing that most scholastic theologians hold this theory of al-Juz' lā Yatajazzā because thereby they can refute the doctrine of the eternity of the world, as Jalāl al-Dīn al-Dawwānī says in his commentary on the 'Aqā'id' that by establishing the existence of this theory one can be safe from many heathen arguments of the philosophers, while Muslim scholars of philosophical tendencies such as Fakhr al-Dīn al-Rāzī, Athīr al-Dīn Abharī, the author of the Hidāyat al-Ḥikmah, Mullā Maḥmūd Jawnpūrī and Muḥibb Ullāh of Bihār, who wrote an excellent work on the principles of Jurisprudence—all these people, in spite of being staunch Muslims, hold the contrary view and with the same purpose.

(4) The fourth text-book on philosophy is al-Hadiyyat al-Sa'idiyyāh (الهدية السعيدية), composed by a later scholar named Faḍl Haqq Khayrābādī (1278/1861) who was noted for being well versed in philosophical studies. This book was dedicated to Muḥammad Sa'id Khān, the Nawwāb of Rāmpūr. As this book is a good example of a text-book on physics ultimately based on the Aristotelian philosophy, a fuller account may not be undesirable.

It begins with the definition and classification of Hikmah (wisdom). Hikmah means knowledge of the realities of things as they are, as far as is possible for human beings and the performance of those acts which lead a man to perfection. Things are, in the first place, of two kinds : those which lie in our power and those which do not. Knowledge about the former is called al-Hikmat al-'Amaliyyah, for things lying within our power are only our actions. This al-Hikmat al-'Amaliyyah (practical wisdom) is divided into three sub-divisions. Tahdhīb al-Akhlāq (ethics), al-Tadbīr al-Manzili (domestic science), and al-Siyāsah al-Mudaniyyah (politics), for human actions are either those which concern the doer only, or those which affect a family, or those which are connected with the members of a city or state.

As to those things which do not lie in the power of a man, knowledge of them is called al-Hikmat al-Nazarīyyah, which is further divided into three sub-divisions, 'Ilm al-Ilāhī (higher philosophy or metaphysics), 'Ilm al-Riyāḍī (mathematics) and 'Ilm al-Ṭabī'ī (physics).

But what place is there for logic? Some have defined Hikmah in such a way that logic is included among its branches, while others regard it as an instrument for the acquirement of knowledge in the same way as a language.

'Ilm al-Ṭabī'ī is again divided into eight branches :

(1) 'Ilm al-Samā' al-Ṭabī'ī (Auscultatio Physics);

- (2) 'Ilm al-Samā' wa'l-Ālam (De coelo et mundo)
- (3) 'Ilm al-Kawn wa'l-Fasād (De generatione et corruptione);
- (4) 'Ilm al-Fi'l wa'l-Infi'āl (De sensu et sensibilibus)
- (5) 'Ilm al-Āthār al-'Ulwiyyah (Meteorology)
- (6) 'Ilm al-Nafs (Psychology);
- (7) 'Ilm al-Nabāt (Botany);
- (8) 'Ilm al-Haywān (Zoology).

Al-hadiyyah covers the third section of al-Nazariyyah, namely, al-Hikmat al-Tabi'iyyah and all its branches. It contains an introduction and sections called Funūn. In the introduction the author discusses those data of physics which, as a matter of fact, fall within the scope of the higher sect philosophy, viz., metaphysics. What are those? A physical body and its definition, that is all; in other words, the controversial question of al-Juz' lā jazzā. The author follows the creed of the philosophers and impugns the theory of al-Jawhar al-Fard.

The first section, divided into several sub-sections, dwells on Ausculatio Physica, i.e., on those properties and accidents, common and inevitable to all things, whether heavenly or earthly. These properties are as follows:

- (1) Space (makān), which according to some philosophers consists of length, and height, and according to others is identified with surface. The author holds the latter view. He also believes in the impossibility of an absolute vacuum.

- (2) Ḥayyiz (place of penetration) which is more general than space.
- (3) Shape, due to the very nature of the body.
- (4) Motion and rest.

Motion is defined as a gradual shifting from potentiality to actuality. Six things are inevitable for motion: (1) a moving body; (2) a mover; (3) space of journey; (4) a beginning; (5) an end; and (6) speed.

Motion takes place in four aspects; Space, Form, Quantity, and Quality. Motion is of two kinds; Dhātī (essential), and 'Āridī (accidental), the former being further divided into three varieties:

- (i) Ṭabī'īyyah (physical), e.g., the falling of a stone from a height;
- (ii) Qaṣrīyyah (compulsory or forced), e.g., the rising of a stone when somebody throws it up;
- (iii) Irādī (intentional), e.g., the movement of animals.

Every body, though resting, has always an inclination to move. This inclination is always resisting any obstacle to its motion. Any body devoid of this inclination cannot be moved, even by a force. Every body has inclination either for Ḥarakat Mustaqīmah (lineal motion) or Ḥarakat Mustadīrah (circular motion). Heavenly bodies move in a circle.

(5) The fifth property common to all bodies is time. There are several theories about time. The author supports the school of Mashshā'ūn (peripatetic philosophers, such as Aristotle, etc.) to whom time is a quantity, united and continuous but not resting, and a speed of motion.

There are several theories about al-ān (the present time) also. The author holds that just a point at the centre of a line is a parting limit between two halves, though the point itself is not divided; similarly al-ān is a point indivisible between the past and the future.

The second section, with many sub-sections, deals with the heavenly bodies and so is also called al-Falakīyyāt. This is the second branch of physics, called al-Samā' wa'l-'Ālam (De coelo et mundo). Al-Falak is that which determines all directions. It represents the uppermost direction above which there is no upward direction. Al-Falak is an uncompounded body, that is to say, it is not composed of bodies of various nature like the earthly bodies. It is subject to the circular motion and to the lineal. Its circular motion is eternal—eternal in this sense “as long as this universe exists”—and is intentional and neither physical nor forced.

Al-Falak has two Nafs (mental faculties), one is absolutely free from matter and the other depends upon matter, just as man has two faculties; by one he has the conception of the universal and by the other he conceives the particular.

The third section deals with the atomic or material world (Unṣuriyyāt) which topic comprises the rest of branches of physics. This section is divided into several sub-sections. The first sub-section deals with De generatione et corruptione.

There are four uncompounded states of the elements : Heat, Cold, Wetness, Dryness. Every material body must have two of them. Heat and cold are active, and wetness and dryness, passive. Every element must have only one state from each of these two groups; and thus there are four elements representing the four simple states :

Fire is hot and dry ;

Air is hot and wet ;

Water is cold and wet ;

Earth is cold and dry.

The author holds that the earth is stationary and not moving, as was supposed by a certain class of ancient philosophers and is still believed by European thinkers of to-day. He has given many arguments, one or two may be given here to show their nature.

(1) The very nature of the earth requires lineal motion and not circular, and so it will go on moving indefinitely in one way, or, after reaching a certain limit, will have to return. The former case is absurd, on account of the impossibility of infinity of space, while in the latter the earth will have to stop its motion before it changes its direction and the ceasing of the motion cannot be conceived for a body which must move.

(2) The second and other arguments of the author are almost of the same nature. Two illustrations will suffice to show the nature of such arguments. If the earth were moving, then a stone thrown straight upward ought not to fall down straight on the same place from which it was thrown ; but we find that it does.

Similarly, a bird flying towards the west ought to fly faster than another one flying in the opposite direction, if the earth were moving from west to east.

Then the author discusses the inter-changeableness and inter-solubility of all these four elements. The equilibrium of the four elements is called the Mizāj (nature or temperament) of the body.

In the next sub-section he dwells upon the action of elements upon one another, and upon different theories as to which of the three following is active: matter, shape or quantity. This is the topic called De sensu et sensato.

Then the author discusses Kāi'nāt la-Jaww (things existing in the atmospheric world, i.e., meteorological objects), e.g., smoke, vapour, cloud, rain, hail, snow, thunder, lightning, shooting-stars, rainbow, halo, wind, etc. In these discussions there is nothing that deserves special mention except that he tries in vain to explain the various colours of the rainbow. Some explanations have been given which were not convincing to Ibn Sīnā who refutes them and frankly admits his inability to explain this peculiar phenomenon. How, indeed, could an explanation have been given in an age when the resolution of the white ray of light into various colours had not yet been discovered?

After meteorological discussions, the author takes up mineralogy. Minerals are, in the first place, of two kinds: those which are malleable, e.g., metals, and those which are not malleable, e.g., glass, sulphur, etc. They are still further sub-divided. As to the formation of these minerals he says that they are generally generated by a mixture of mercury and sulphur in different proportions. As to whether silver can be changed into gold, he quotes the opinion of Ibn Sīnā who says that this possibility was never manifested to him, because the difference in the proportions of the ingredients is unknown. The author, however, does not agree with the final authority on the subject and points out that many sages and thinkers believe in the feasibility of silver being changed into gold.

Next he deals with botany, and describes in detail the various characteristics of vegetables.

Then he turns to zoology. The animal mind has two faculties, stimulating and apprehending; the former being divided into three—nervous stimulus, faculties of appetite and anger; and the latter being classified in two groups—external (i e, the five senses) and internal, which are also five.

Lastly, the author discusses psychology and deals with the human mind, which has two faculties—Quwwat 'Āqilah, also called Quwwat Naẓariyyah (the faculty of knowing) and Quwwat 'Āmilah (the faculty of action).

The author discusses the different theories regarding Nafs (mind) and supports the one held generally by the Muslim philosophers, to whom Nafs is an essence, free from matter, neither body nor pertaining to any body, having with the body a connection of control and administration rather than that existing between a whole and its part or between a container and the contained; it is a created thing, surviving the decay of the body, and it conceives the universal as well as the particular. The detailed discussion of this definition of "mind" brings the book to an end.

(B) COMMENTARIES ON BOOKS ON PHILOSOPHY PROPER :

(i) Commentaries on Foreign Books : Three

As already mentioned, the Hidāyat al-Hikmah is a well-known book on general philosophy, composed by Shaykh Athīr al-Dīn 'Umar al-Abhari (660/1261). On this text two scholars, one Mullā Husayn b. Mu'īn Maybudhī and the other Ṣadr al-Dīn Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm, known as Ṣadrā-i-Shirāzi (828/1424) wrote commentaries. The commentary of the former is known as the Maybudhī (مبذی) and that of the latter as the Ṣadrā (صدرا). Both these commentaries are held in great respect and are widely used in India. They have been further commented upon. On the Maybudhī no less eminent a scholar than 'Abd al-Hakīm of Siālkot wrote glosses, while the Ṣadrā was copiously annotated by Walī Ullāh of Lucknow, who was a scholar of a later period, noted for his philosophical writings. He belonged to the Farangī Maḥall of Lucknow, which has produced many scholars. He died in 1270/1853. Both these Indian super-commentaries are helpful in elucidating the philosophical subtleties of the two texts.

The third commentary is that of 'Abd al-Haqq Khayrābādī (to whom reference has been made above) on the full Hidāyat al-Hikmah itself. The author being rather modern, this work falls out of the scope of the present thesis. It may, however, be said that it is widely read by students of philosophy in India, before they read the standard commentaries such as the Ṣadrā and the Maybudhī.

(ii) Commentaries on Indian Books : Three

One is Mullā Maḥmūd Jawnpūrī's commentary, entitled al-Shams al-Bāzighah (الشمس البازغة), on his own text-book, al-Hikmat al-Bālighah, mentioned above. First he introduces his text, saying Qultu (i.e., I said) and then after a certain length, it is followed by an explanation, commencing with the word Aqūlu (i.e., now I say). On this full work, that is, the text and the commentary, two learned men of a later period, one Ḥamd Ullāh (1160/1747), the well-known commentator on Muḥibb Ullāh's Sullam al-'Ulūm, and the other Nizām al-Dīn (1161/1748), a distinguished scholar, who was the ancestor of the 'Ulamā'-i-Farangī Maḥall, wrote illuminating glosses, which are much appreciated in India.

(iii) Works on Logic : (a) Text-Books : Three

(1) Al-Durrat al-Bahīyyah (الدرّة البهيّة), a small tract written by 'Abd al-Ḥaqq Muḥaddith of Delhi. It deals with the chief problems of logic. It begins with the three kinds of significance :

1. Muṭābaqah, that is to say, literal or of coincidence, e.g., 'man' means a rational animal ;
2. Taḍammunī, i.e., partial or of implication, e.g., "man" may mean a mere animal only ;
3. Iltizāmī, i.e., associated significance, e.g., "man" may mean one capable of teaching and instruction.

Then the author deals with "definition," which brings in the topic of genus, species, differentia, etc. Then he dwells on proposition and its kinds, categorical and hypothetical, the parts of a proposition, and then on contradiction, conversion, simplex and conversion by contradiction, and, lastly, on syllogism and the four figures. In short, this small tract treats of all the main principles of Logic in a very condensed way.

(2) The second text-book in chronological order, but first in order of merit, is the well-known Sullam al-'Ulūm (سلم العلوم) of Muḥibb Ullāh Bihārī, whom we have met several times already. This book occupies the highest position in the ranks of Logic in India. Among works on Logic written outside India hardly any book enjoys such a celebrity and reputation as that of two works: one al-Shamsiyyah by Najm al-Dīn 'Umar b. 'Alī al-Qazwīnī, known as al-Kātibī (613/-1216), and the other, the Tahdhīb al-Manṭiq by Sa'd al-Dīn Taftāzānī (792/1389). Both these works have attracted the attention of a large number of scholars who have written commentaries and super-commentaries, glosses and super-glosses on them, but as the Indian work Sullam al-'Ulūm is considered to be suitable for advanced students, these two are generally read and studied prior to the Sullam. The author in his brief preface has expressed a desire that it may shine among the text-books just as the sun does among the stars, and I think his desire has been realised. The author commences his book, as usual with Oriental writers, with Ḥamd wa Ṣalāt (Divine praise and prayers for the Prophet). The Divine praise has been so skilfully constructed in words technically connected with Arabian logic that it may be quoted here :

سبحان ما عظم شأنه لا يحد ولا يتصور ولا ينتج ولا يغير تعالى عن
الجنس والجهات جعل الكليات والجزئيات الايمان به نعم التصديق و الاعتصام
به حيزا التوفيق

(How holy and great ! He cannot be defined nor conceived nor inferred. He never changes and is above resemblance and directions. He created the universal as well as the particular. To believe in Him is the best judgment and to depend upon Him is the excellent grace).

In India logical studies are supposed to be completed with the study of this text-book and the commentaries upon it. The importance of this book may be further judged from the fact that more than a dozen eminent scholars have regarded it as an honour to write commentaries upon it.¹ Some of these commentators will be mentioned later on when commentaries on text-books on logic will be discussed.

The chief characteristic of the book is that it is very brief, like an ideal text-book after Arabian fashion, and yet no problem has been left out. The author has given all the controversial points with their correct solutions. Unless a student already possesses a fair knowledge of logic, he cannot understand it, as it is too difficult and too advanced for a beginner.

The book, unlike other works on logic, is not divided into chapters and sub-chapters. After Ḥamd wa Ṣalāt the author starts with an introduction which deals with knowledge and its kinds, Taṣawwur (conception) and Taşdıq (judgment) and the Mawḍū' (subject-matter) of Logic. After the introduction, the book may be regarded as having been divided into two parts, one dealing with Taşawwur and the other with Taşdıq. To the latter he has devoted a much longer space.

It is a great pity that, like all followers of the Arabian system of logic, he deals with Inductive Logic very briefly. He says that induction makes the conclusion probable but not certain. He gives the only example given by nearly all the Muslim logicians, which runs thus: All animals move their lower jaw while chewing food, because men, horses, cows, etc., do that. This conclusion can never be certain, as there may be an exception, for it is said that the crocodile does not do so. He does not agree with Sayyid Sharīf Jurjānī, an eminent scholar of Persia, to whom reference has been made several times in the preceding pages, when he says that al-Iḥṣā' (examination of all the similar cases) is possible. While discussing induction, he raises a curious objection. In a certain house, there are three occupants, A, B and C, two Muslims and one Hindū. If it is not at first recognised which is which, a conclusion may be drawn from the observation of the larger number. Supposing you happen to see first A and B, you may, because two are more than one, come to the conclusion that these two are Muslims and the absent C will necessarily be the Hindū. On another occasion you may happen to see A and C. Then, according to the same method of argument, you may think that these two are the Muslims and the remaining B must be the Hindū. And if on a third occasion you see B and C, you will take them to be the Muslims and the absent A to be the Hindū. This means that you have regarded each of them both as a Muslim and as a Hindū. The solution is that in passing judgment on the basis of observation the larger number does not provide certainty. When you do not know for certain which of them is Muslim and which Hindū, each one of them may quite possibly be a Muslim or a Hindū.

(3) The third book on Logic written by an Indian is Mirqāt (مرقاة) by Faḍl Imām, with whom we have already become acquainted. It is hardly more than a compilation, the material being taken from the Shamsiyyah and the Tahdhīb al-Manṭiq. Upon this work the grandson of the author ‘Abd al-Ḥaqq wrote a commentary.

(B) COMMENTARIES ON WORKS OF LOGIC :

(i) Commentaries on Foreign Logical Works : Six

The first book that deserves notice is a commentary entitled Badī‘ al-Mizān (بدیع المیزان), composed by ‘Abd Ullāh Tulanbī who has already been mentioned as the first scholar to promote the study of philosophy in India, on a treatise entitled Mizān al-Manṭiq. The value of this commentary lies in the fact that it was the first work on philosophy or logic written by an Indian. On this commentary Faḍl Imām Khayrābādī wrote a super-commentary entitled Tashhīḍ al-Adhḥān (تشحید الاذهان).

I have already introduced two well-known textbooks written outside India, one being al-Shamsiyyah by Al-Kātibī (693/1293) and the other Tahdhīb al-

Manṭiq by Taftāzānī (792/1389). The first was commented upon by Quṭb al-Dīn Maḥmūd b. Muḥammad (766/1364) and was further commented upon by Sayyid Sharīf Jurjānī (818/1415). The first commentary is known as the Quṭbī and the super-commentary as the Mir Quṭbī. Quṭb al-Dīn composed a text-book also, known as al-Risālah fi'l-Taṣawwur wa'l-Taṣdīq. The Tahdhib al-Manṭiq was commented upon by two scholars, one 'Abd Ullāh Yazdī and the other Jalāl al-Dīn Dawwānī.

Having described these three foreign books, I now turn to the Indian commentaries and super-commentaries upon them.

On the Mir Quṭbī 'Abd al-Hakīm of Siālkot wrote further glosses which are full of learned discussions on controversial points of logic.

On Yazdī's commentary on the Tahdhib al-Manṭiq, 'Abd al-Nabī of Aḥmadābād (1144/1731) wrote glosses and marginal notes; and upon Dawwānī's commentary on the same text-book (i.e., Tahdhib), Mir Zāhid, who has already been noticed, added glosses which are known as al-Ḥāshiyat al-Zāhidiyyat al-Jalāliyyah (الحاشية الزاهدية الجلالية). The merits of these glosses have been fully recognised by Indian scholars of Arabic, inasmuch as a large number of the learned men of the succeeding generations have written super-glosses and super-super-glosses on these glosses of Mir Zāhid.

Also on the aforesaid Risālat al-Taṣawwur wa'l-Taṣdīq by Quṭb al-Dīn, the same Mir Zāhid wrote glosses known as al-Ḥāshiyat al-Zāhidiyyat al-Quṭbiyyah (الحاشية الزاهدية القطبية). These glosses have also attracted much attention among the students of logic in India and consequently many additions have been made to these glosses in the form of marginal and super-marginal notes upon them. These two sets of Zāhid's glosses are in themselves separate text-books, and hence they too require glosses to explain them. They are full of logical subtleties and complicated discussions and are meant for advanced and serious students of logic. Out of many super-glosses on al-Hāshiyat al-Quṭbiyyah those of Ghulām Yahyā Bihārī who died in 1128/1715, deserve mention. These super glosses have been in their turn, commented upon by the scholars of the succeeding generations.

(ii) Commentaries on Indian Text-Books on Logic: Four

Besides the Sharḥ Mirqāt, previously referred to, various commentaries by various scholars on the Sullam al-'Ulūm deserve mention. As already said, more than a dozen scholars wrote commentaries on this book, the following being the most widely used :

1. The commentary known as the Ḥamd Ullāh (حمد الله), after its author, Ḥamd Ullāh of Sandilah (1160/1747).
2. The commentary known as the Qāḍī Mubārak, (قاضى مبارک), after its author, Qāḍī Mubārak of Gopāma'ū (1162/1748).

N.B.—The first commentary is noted for the portion relating to Taṣḍīq (Judgment), while the second is valued for the section of Taṣawwur (Conception).

3. The commentary known as the Mullā Ḥasan

(ملا حسن), after its author, Mullā Ḥasan b. Ghulām Muṣṭafā (1198/1783).

4. The commentary entitled the Mir'āt al-Shurūḥ (مرآة الشروح), composed by Mullā Muḥammad Mubīn (1225/1810).

All these commentaries, especially those of Ḥamd Ullāh and Qāḍī Mubārak, are highly esteemed in India and some scholars have further written glosses on these commentaries.

CHAPTER VIII

LITERATURE ON MATHEMATICS, ASTRONOMY AND MEDICINES

Since India has not contributed much to the mathematical, astrological and medical branches of Arabic literature, I propose to deal with them briefly in one place, here.

The contribution of India to the above-mentioned departments of Arabic literature during the pre-Ghaznawid period has already been referred to, so that here only the literature of later periods will require consideration.

I. CONTRIBUTION TO MATHEMATICAL LITERATURE

Mathematics is one of those sciences which received less and less attention from Muslim scholars after the golden days of their intellectual activity and scientific researches had passed away. To say nothing of original work, they could not even write commentaries, as they did in the case of other branches of learning. When Arabic-speaking countries and those countries lying close to them did not contribute much to the mathematical branches of Arabic literature, it is not to be expected that India, the Arabic product of which is of a much later date than that of the other countries, would produce any Arabic work of importance or originality on mathematics. But just as Persia might reasonably be proud of producing in later periods a few mathematicians of high repute, such as Bahā' al-Dīn Muḥammad b. Ḥusayn al-‘Āmulī (1031/1621), etc., similarly India may be given the credit of being the home of a few equally good mathematicians, such as ‘Iṣmat Ullāh b. ‘Aẓmat Ullāh Sahāranpūrī (after 1690/1679), Luṭf Ullāh al-Mutakhalḥiṣ bi'l-Muhandis b. Ustād Aḥmad al-Mi‘mār and his son Imām al-Dīn.

Bahā' al-Dīn's Khulāṣat al-Ḥisāb is an important work on arithmetic. Its importance may be judged from the fact that several authors have written commentaries and super-commentaries upon it in Arabic as well as in Persian, and that Professor Nesselmann has edited and Aristide Marre has translated it into French. The first author who wrote a copious commentary on it is one of the Indian mathematicians just mentioned. ‘Iṣmat Ullāh was an eminent mathematicians of his age. His commentary entitled Anwār Khulāṣat al-Ḥisāb (انوار خلاصه الحساب) on the above-mentioned Khulāṣat al-Ḥisāb is a learned work in which the author has creditably displayed his mathematical talents. The original author and the commentator belong almost to the same period and died at an interval of about sixty years only.

The commentator commences his commentary with a brief introduction in which he emphasises the importance of arithmetic, and then records his appreciation of the Khulāṣah.

While commenting upon the definition of arithmetic in the text, he discusses at length the meaning of Riyāḍī (mathematics) and the reason why it is so named. He states that Riyāḍī has been so called because of the training it gives to the mind. "The ancient philosophers," says he, "used to give preference to it over the rest of the sciences including even logic." Then he discusses whether number, with or without a relation to objects, is the subject-matter of arithmetic. He quotes Abū 'Alī Sīnā's authority as saying that an arithmetician deals with abstract number without reference to any subject. The commentator criticises this statement and asserts that absolute number does not form the subject-matter of this science.

The original author's definition of number as being a quantity that can be applied to a unit and to a combination of units, is incomplete in the opinion of the commentator, as he thinks that this definition does not include fractions. He, therefore, suggests that the correct definition of number will be: "A quantity applicable to one and to a fraction or multiplication of one."

It is curious to see that though numerals are so closely associated with arithmetic, yet they have been very sparingly used throughout the text as well as in the commentary.

The commentator, while commenting upon the anecdotes given by the original author, has in places added some more short stories. For instance, the text narrates that 'Alī, the fourth rightly directed Caliph, being once asked the lowest common measure of numbers from one to nine, said, "Multiply the days of the year by the days of the week," that is to say, 360 multiplied by 7 is equal to 2520. Commenting on this story, the commentator gives three more stories, all relating to 'Alī, to show how well-versed he was in arithmetic. One of these may not be out of place here. Once upon a time 'Alī, when he was just putting his foot in the stirrup of his saddle, was approached by a woman who complained that a great wrong had been done to her, as she had been given only one out of six hundred dīnārs left by her brother. 'Alī at once remarked that perhaps her brother had left behind him besides herself a wife, parents, two daughters and twelve brothers. "Yes," said she, whereupon 'Alī rejoined that in that case she had received her due.

These stories, if true, really go to show the extraordinary arithmetical talent of 'Alī. But it may be suspected that actually these calculations might have been worked out by some expert and in order to prove the arithmetical skill of the Prophet's cousin and son-in-law, they have been, by way of "pious falsehood," ascribed to him.

This commentary is very illuminating and useful and establishes the mathematical talents of the author. All the difficult passages and complicated problems in the text are fully explained.

On the Khulāṣah, Luṭf Ullāh, poetically named al-Muhandis b. Ustād Aḥmad the architect, also wrote a brief commentary to which his son Imām al-Dīn added glosses. This Luṭf Ullāh translated the text into Persian also. All these works were consulted by Rawṣhan 'Alī when he again translated the text into Persian, with explanatory notes, as late as 1812, A.D.¹

¹ Dr Nesselmann who edited the text, says in his introduction that he was unable to trace any of the commentaries consulted by Rawṣhan 'Alī. But at that time the catalogues of the British Museum and the India Office Library had not been published.

It may not be out of place to mention that Luṭf Ullāh, his father Ustād Aḥmad the architect, his brother 'Aṭā' Ullāh, and his son Imām al-Dīn, were all of them scholars noted for their mathematical attainments. 'Aṭā' Ullāh composed a treatise in verse on Arithmetic, Mensuration and Algebra. Luṭf Ullāh, besides his above-mentioned Arabic commentary on, and Persian translation of, the K'ulāṣat al-Ḥisāb, wrote other books on mathematics, but in Persian, not in Arabic.

II. CONTRIBUTION TO ASTRONOMICAL LITERATURE

On Astronomy, two Arabic text books are widely known: one is al-Mulakhkhaṣ fi'l-Hay'at al-Basīṭ (الملخص في الهيئة البسيطة) by Maḥmūd b. Muḥammad al-Jaghminī al-Khwārizmī, which work is generally known as Jaghminī; and the other is Tashrīḥ al-Aflāk (تشریح الافلاك) by Bahā' al-Dīn, the author of the K'ulāṣat al-Ḥisāb. On the Jaghminī Mūsā b. Qāḍī-Zādah composed a commentary which is generally known as the Sharḥ-i-Jaghminī.

One Indian mathematician, Imām al-Dīn b. Luṭf Ullāh, to whom a reference has been made above, wrote a super commentary on the Sharḥ-i-Jaghminī and a commentary, entitled al-Taṣrīḥ (التصريح) on the Tashrīḥ al-Aflāk of Bahā' al-Dīn. In the latter the commentator has embodied some materials from Indian astronomy also, which are quite new to Arabian astronomy. One such addition is what is known in astronomy as al-Dā'irat al-Hindiyyah (The Indian circle) which is used for the determination of the midday, etc. Both these commentaries occupy a high place in the curriculum of astronomical studies in India.

Perhaps the greatest and most important contribution of India to the mathematical or astronomical branch of Arabic literature during the post-Ghaznawid period is the Kitāb al-Maqā'is (كتاب المقاييس), an Arabic translation made by Mu'tamad Khān Rustam b. Diyānat Khān Qubād Hārithī from a work of Clavius on Gnomonics (published at Rome in 1581). The Indian Office Library contains a manuscript of it, which is, as stated by the son of the translator, the rough copy (but neatly and clearly written) of Mu'tamad Khān. It is a voluminous work in 427 folios, with thirty-three lines to a page. The British Museum has only a small fragment of it. (Cat. Bri. Mus. 443.) No other MS. of the work can be traced as existing in any Indian library, or elsewhere outside India, as far as the available catalogues can be relied upon.

Mu'tamad Khān Rustam, who flourished in the reign of Awrangzīb in a position of some importance, was a great friend of learning and of books. Several manuscripts copied for him are to be found in the British Museum, on the title of each of which it is written in his own hand that it was copied for him and for his son, and that in places he corrected them. The names of two such MSS. are al-Nūr al-Sāfir (Add. 16648) and al-Kawākib al-Sā'irah (Add. 16647). On the margin of the title-page of the MS. there is this note written by Mr. Johnson that the translator went to Portugal where he translated the work. This work deserves close study by those who are interested in this branch of learning.

III. CONTRIBUTION TO LITERATURE ON MEDICINE

The contribution of India to Arabic literature on medicine falls under two heads: one, commentaries and super-commentaries, and the other, text-books (i.e., original compositions). Under the first heading there are seven works that arrest our attention:

(1) One of the most important Arabic works on the science of medicine is al-Qānūn by Abū 'Alī Sīnā. On this medical encyclopaedia several scholars have written commentaries, of whom three are Indian. One is Ḥakīm 'Alī Jilānī (1017/1608) who was a physician attached to the court of Akbar. He was a learned scholar, excelled his contemporaries in mathematics and medicine, and was admired for his wonderful cures. Recognising his excellent talents, Akbar conferred upon him the rank of 700 and the title of Jālīnūs-i-Zamān (Galen of the time). In the thirty-ninth year of Akbar's reign he constructed the famous reservoir through which lay the passage to a small room, the door of which was always open but water did not enter the room. When completed, the Emperor went to see it. He himself plunged into the water and entered the room, which he found well furnished. He remained in the room for some time, to the anxiety of his attendants outside the reservoir, who were greatly relieved when he came out again safely. In 1017/1608 Jahāngīr also visited the reservoir and saw the room, whereupon he promoted the skilful constructor to the rank of 2000.¹ If the description of the reservoir given by Jahāngīr himself in his Tuzuk and by 'Abd al-Razzāq in the Ma'āthir al Umarā' is correct, one has to admit that the constructor was really a genius. His commentary on al-Qānūn is the largest of its kind and in point of authority comes next to that of al-Qarshī.

(2) The next commentary on the Qānūn is entitled Ghāyat al-Fuhūm fī Tadbīr al-Maḥmūm (غاية الفهم في تدبير المأموم) by Ishāq Khān b. Ismā'īl Khān of Delhi, an Indian physician of the 12th century of the Hījra. This commentary is confined to that portion of the Qānūn which treats of fevers (i.e., Fann I of Book IV). The Bānkīpūr Catalogue IV, p. 59, contains the following account :

"In the preface the author states that in this he proposes to discuss the prognosis and critical days of fevers, along with their treatment. To accomplish this purpose, he consulted al-Qarshī's commentary on the Qānūn, which, though it contains useful comments, is yet full of futile attacks on Abū Sīnā. He, therefore, referred to al-Jīlānī's commentary which, according to him, contains successful refutations of al-Qarshī's hostile criticisms, but the practical portion is commented upon at such length that it becomes too voluminous to be of general utility. This work, he says, is an abridgment of Jīlānī's long comments, to serve as an introduction to that encyclopædia."

(3) The third Indian commentary on the Qānūn is Sharḥ Kullīyyāt al-Qānūn by Ḥakīm Shīfā'ī Khān b. Ḥakīm 'Abd al-Shāfī Khān Masīḥ al-Mulk, an Indian physician who flourished in the reign of Āṣaf al-Dawlah of Oudh (1181-1212) and after the death of that monarch served Sa'ādat 'Alī Khān (1212-1229).

(4) and (5) Besides the Qānūn, two other medical books, one Burhān al-Dīn Nafīs, 'Iwāḍ al-Kirmānī's commentary, known as al-Nafīsī, on 'Alā' al-Dīn 'Alī b. Abu'l-Hazm al-Qarshī's (d. 678/1279) abridgment, entitled al-Mūjaz, of the Qānūn, and the other the same commentator's commentary on Najīb al-Dīn Abū Ḥāmid Muḥammad b. 'Alī al-Samarqandī's well-known work entitled al-Asbāb wa'l-'Alāmāt, have attracted the attention of several Indian scholars and physicians who have written marginal glosses upon them. The former, i.e., al-Nafīsī has been further commented upon by Ḥakīm A'āijib b. Mu'ālij Khān, an Indian physician of the twelfth century of the Hijra, and by the Ḥakīm Sharīf Khān of Dehli, a physician of Persian extraction, who settled in India and vied with the 'Alawī Khān, the celebrated physician of Muḥammad Shāh, in reputation as a successful medical practitioner and Arabic scholar.

(6) and (7) Of the glosses on the Sharḥ al-Asbāb wa'l-'Alāmāt, two deserve mention: one is Kashf al-Ishkālāt (كشف الاشكالات) by Muḥammad Hāshīm b. Ḥakīm Muḥammad Aḥsan b. Muhammad Afdal, and the other is al-Fawā'id al-Sharīfiyyah (الفوائد الشريفيه) by Muḥammad Sharīf Khān, mentioned above.

Under the second heading there are four books worthy of notice:

(1) Al-Juz' al-'Amālī min Akmal al-Ṣanā'ah (الجزء العمل من اكمل الصنعة) by Ḥakīm Kāẓim, son of the Shī'ah Mujtahid named Haydar 'Alī al-Najāfī, an Indian physician (1149/1736) who was given the title of Ḥādhiq al-Mulk. This work is divided into an introduction (on evil or fatal symptoms), seven Maqālahs (on symptoms and treatments of local and general diseases) and a Khātimah

(on weights and measures used in medicine). This work is noticed in the Kashf al-Hujab wa'l Asfār under the title of Jāmi' al-Ṣānā'i which seems to be incorrect.¹

(2) Asrār al-'Ilāj (اسرار العلاج) by Ḥakīm 'Alī Sharīf of Lucknow, who received the title of Ra'īs al-Aṭibbā' from Ghāzī al-Dīn Haydar of Lucknow. The value of this work may be judged from the following remark of a learned physician who compiled the Bānkīpūr Catalogue, Vol. IV.²

"The author throughout this treatise shows rare powers of criticism and original investigation such as are not generally to be met with in other eastern writers. This work strikingly depicts the methods of case-taking (i.e., diagnosis), the mode of reasoning and the way of investigation peculiar to the Indian physicians of the 12th and 13th centuries A.H."

(3) Hilyat al-Wāṣifīn wa Wishāḥ al-Tālibīn (حليه الواصفين و وشاح الطالبين) by Muḥammad Maḥdī b. 'Alī Aṣghar b. Nūr Muḥammad Khān, Prime Minister of Naṣīr al-Dīn Haydar, king of Oudh, and pupil of 'Alī Sharīf Khān, mentioned above.

(4) The Qarābādīn-i-'Alawī Khān (قراة دین علوی خان) by Mu'tamad al-Mulk Ḥakīm Muḥammad Hāshim b. Ḥakīm Muḥammad Hādī, known as 'Alawī Khān, the celebrated physician of the Mughal courts from the reign of Awrangzīb down to Muḥammad Shāh's time, when he was taken by Nādir Shāh to his capital but allowed soon to return to Delhi, where he died in 1749. The compiler of the Bānkīpūr Catalogue IV

2. Ibid., No. 85.

remarks that this work reveals critical observation, originality and insight on the part of the author, and is a monumental representation of the mode of criticism, observation and adaptation practised by the Indian physicians.¹

At the conclusion of this brief description of some of the Indian Arabic medical works, it may be added that Indian scholars of Arabic medicine were not simply commentators and glossary writers. They have made new researches also, and have recorded the results in works such as the Qarābādīn of 'Alawī Khān, etc., of which the compiler of the Bānkīpūr catalogue, well-versed in Arabian medicine, speaks in high terms. Professor Denison Ross is right in remarking that "they (Indian physicians) have done so much for the adaptation of the ancient system of medicine to their own surroundings and requirements,"²

CHAPTER IX

HISTORICAL LITERATURE

Arabic historical literature is so extensive and important that the producers of it may reasonably be proud. It is a production of several countries and not of Arabia alone. But we are here concerned with India only, and propose to examine under the present heading what she has contributed to this branch of Arabic literature.

As most works on history by Indian scholars are in Persian, those written in Arabic are very few and exceptional, whereas in Persian, Elliot has been able to give the titles of more than two hundred historical works written in this language, excluding biographies of poets, scholars and saints. Owing to the predominance of Arabic in the early centuries of Islam, religious, philosophical and scientific works were generally written in Arabic, even in Persia, Turkistān and Afghānistān; but it never achieved any success in those countries against Persian in the departments of poetry, light literature and history. Still less was the case in India.

Under the present heading there are fourteen works which may deserve mention. They may be arranged under the following heads :

1. Pure History	4
2. Chronology	1
3. Lives of the Prophet	3

4. Other Biographies	5
5. Travel	1
		TOTAL	14

I. PURE HISTORY : FOUR WORKS

1. Tuhfat al-Mujāhidīn (تجده لمجاهدين), by Shaykh Zayn al-Dīn b. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Ma'barī, whom we have met already in connection with his book, Qurrat al-'Ayn, on Fiqh. This book is a historical account of the doings and proceedings of the Portuguese in Mālābār from the time of their first appearance in that country in the year 904/1498, up to the year 989/1581. The whole book is divided into four sections.

The first section deals with the Islamic injunctions regarding the holy war. The second dwells upon the first appearance and dissemination of Islām in Mālābār. The third is confined to a short account of the singular usages and customs of the infidels of the country, and the last section, forming the main part of the book to which the first three sections may be taken as an introduction, is further divided into fourteen sub-sections, called Faṣls.

The value of this work may be judged from the fact that it was translated into English by Lieutenant Rowlandson as early as the year 1833, that is to say, a little less than a century back, and afterwards edited and rendered into Portuguese by David Lopes in 1898. As to the accuracy of this historical narration, it is sufficient to quote Lieutenant Rowlandson's remark upon it. He says: "It is creditable to the author that the testimony of the western authors establishes the fidelity of his narrative, since besides a very minute and extraordinary agreement on many minor points of detail, in the relation of leading events, it is seldom found much at variance with their accounts." Moreover, the author of the Tuḥfat al-Mujāhidīn has exercised his power of criticism and judgment in accepting traditions. For instance, while giving an account of the first appearance of Islām in the country of Mālābar, he has rejected the tradition current among his Muslim countrymen, according to which the king of Mālābār, having been impressed by the miracle of the splitting of the moon, went to the Prophet himself and embraced Islām.

In addition to Zayn al-Dīn's narration of the struggles of the Zamorin of Calicut with the Portuguese, there is another account of the same by Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-'Azīz Kālikūtī, who composed five hundred and three couplets on the subject, under the title of al-Faṭḥ al-Mubīn li'l-Sāmīrī Alladhī Yuḥibb al-Muslimīn (الفتح المبين للسامري الذي يحب المسلمين) (i.e., the conspicuous victory of Zamorin who loves the Muslims). This work will be further considered under the heading "Contribution of India to the Poetical Branch of Arabic Literature." Here it may be added that a comparison of these two works encourages belief in their trustworthiness.

(2) Al-I'lām bi-A'lām Bayt-Allāh al-Ḥarām (الإعلام بآعلام بيت الله الحرام) by Quṭb al-Dīn Muḥammad b. 'Alā' al-Dīn Aḥmad al-Nahrwālī. The father of the author left his native place for the Ḥijāz and settled at Makkah, where Quṭb al-Dīn was born in 917/1511. After completing his education at Makkah, he went to Egypt in 943/1536 where he pursued his studies further with the eminent scholars of that place. He soon attracted notice as a learned scholar. Later on, he was employed as a professor of theology at a college in Makkah, and was finally appointed a muftī there. He died in 990/1582. The present work is a comprehensive history of Makkah. It consists of an introduction, ten chapters, and an appendix. In the introduction the author enumerates his sources. He says that the oldest historian of Makkah is Abu'l-Walīd Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm al-Arzaqī. The following list of the contents will show the value of the book :

- Chapter I. A Geographical account of Makkah and the Ka'bah.
- „ II. An account of the foundation and construction of the Ka'bah.
- „ III. A description of al-Masjid al-Ḥarām during the period of Ignorance and the early days of Islām.
- „ IV. An account of what was added to the Masjid by the 'Abbāsids.
- „ V. A special mention of the two additions made after the alteration initiated by Maṣṣūr and completed by his son Hādī, during the later period of the 'Abbāsids.
- „ VI. An account of the repairs done by the Jrākisab.
- „ VII. An account of the Masjid during the 'Uḥmānid period.

Chapter VIII. An account of the Masjid during the reign of Salīm I.

„ X. An account of the Masjid during the reign of Sultān Murād.

Appendix An account of the sacred places of interest at Makkah.

In order to do full justice to the history of the Ka'bah, the author has given in outline the whole history of the Muslims from the time of the Prophet right down to his own days.

The importance of this work has been duly recognised by Western scholars, having been edited with earlier works of the same nature, by Wuestenfeld. But as the author, although of Indian blood, was born, bred and educated outside India, it is doubtful whether his work can claim to be placed with the contributions of India to Arabic literature. In reply, it may be urged that it is within the scope of the present thesis to include the works of those scholars of Indian blood also who were born and flourished outside India.

(3) Al-Barq al-Yamānī fi'l-Fatḥ al-'Uḥmānī (البرق اليمني في الفتح العثماني), by the same author. This is a historical account of the events that took place in Yaman during the time of the author (i.e., from the beginning of the tenth century to 978 A.H.) It consists of three Bābs and a Khātimah (conclusion). The first Bāb, divided into 13 Faṣls deals with the history of the kings of Yaman from the beginning of the tenth century of the Hijra up to the time when she was conquered by the 'Uḥmānī Turks. The second Bāb (in 37 Faṣls) contains the history of the country from the time of its annexation by the 'Uḥmānī Turks up to the reign of Sulaymān; the third (in 60 Faṣls) dwells on the history of the events that took place in Yaman during the reign of Sultān Salīm; and the Khātimah (in 5 Faṣls) contains the account of the return of Sinān Pāshā to Egypt and of his conquest of Tūnis and Goletta.

(4) A History of Gujarāt, entitled Zafar al-Wāliḥ bi-Muẓaffar wa Ālih (ظفرالواله بظفر و آله), composed in the first decades of the 17th century by 'Abd Ullāh Muḥammad b. 'Umar al-Nahrwālī al-Āṣafī Ulugh Khānī, better known as Hajjī Dabīr, who flourished in the end of the tenth and the beginning of the eleventh century of the Hījra. The author was born in Makkah about 946/1540. He first went to India when a boy of sixteen years in 962/1555 and three years later entered the service of his first master Muḥammad Ulugh Khān, the Abyssinian, who was a prominent noble and general in Gujarāt serving 'Imād al-Mulk. In 980/1572, when Akbar entered Ahmadābād, Ulugh Khān became a prisoner and our author was left without employment. In the following year he was appointed to carry the Waqf money from Gujarāt to Makkah and Madīnah. In 983/1575 he was back in India and now in the service of another Gujarāt noble named Sayf al-Mulk, and later on in that of Fawlād Khān, a leading noble of Khāndesh. The exact date of his death is not known, but he is known to have been living in 1020/1611.

This work is divided into two parts, called Daftars. The first Daftar deals with the history of the Muẓaffarid kings of Gujarāt, who ruled from 799 to 980 A.H.

(1396-1572 A D), and also of the rulers of Khāndesh and the Deccan; and the second Daftar contains the general history of all the various dynasties that ruled over Northern India from the 12th century to the sixteenth century A.D. It has been edited by the eminent orientalist, Professor Denison Ross, who was the first to realise the value of the work. This edition consists of three volumes, each with a scholarly introduction. "It will be seen," remarks the learned editor, "that this work is much more than a mere chronicle of the kings and that a larger portion of the (first) volume is devoted to digressions, historical, biographical and bibliographical, which carry the reader back to the early history of Islām on the one hand and forward to the beginning of the 17th century on the other." In another place Sir Denison Ross makes the following observation :

"Although he was of Indo-Persian origin, his ancestors having fled from Persia to India at the time of the Tārtār invasion in the 13th century, his native language was Arabic and he tells us that he only learnt Persian some time after his arrival in India. These circumstances have a double bearing on the value of this work : first in respect of the style of the Arabic which, though often careless, is evidently the language of a man born and bred in Mecca ; and secondly in respect of Indian and Persian proper names, which our author as a foreigner takes great care to spell correctly and in many cases to explain."

II. CHRONOLOGY : ONE WORK

There is one book that deserves notice under the persent heading. It is al-Nūr al-Sāfir 'an Akhbār al-Qarn al-Āshir (النور السافر عن أخبار القرن العاشر), written by Muḥyī al-Dīn 'Abd al-Qādir al-'Aydārūs of Aḥmadābād. He was a member of the noble family of 'Aydārūs of Yaman. His father went to India in 958/1551 and settled in Aḥmadābād, where our author was born in 978/1570, his mother being an Indian slave-girl, presented to his father by some of his disciples. He received his education from eminent scholars both of Yaman and India. He was a distinguished Sūfī, an eminent scholar, and a prolific writer. He has left about a score of works. This work is, as indicated by its very title, a chronology of the events of the tenth century of the Hijra. Similar works of early writers, e.g., al-Durrat al-Kāminah fi'l-Qarn al-Thāminah by Ibn Ḥajar and al-Ḍaw' al-Lāmi fi'l-Qarn al-Tāsi' by al-Ṣakhāwī, are well known. The present work is a continuation of the same scheme, with a slight difference in the plan and scope. Both the early works just mentioned are confined to short biographical notes on secular and religious worthies who died in the eighth and ninth centuries respectively, these names being arranged in alphabetical and not in chronological order, while the work under consideration deals chronologically not only with the biographical accounts of men of rank and letters but with political and social events as well. In short, this work is a valuable member of that very useful biographical series of which al-Durrat al-Kāminah and al-Ḍaw' al-Lāmi' form the earlier volumes, while later works such as Khulāṣat al-Āthār, Silk al-Durar and 'Ajā'ib al-Āthār are succeeding links. It may also be mentioned here ✓ that besides al-Nūr al-Sāfir several works of the same type relating more or less to the same period have been written by different authors, of which works al-Kawākib al-Sā'irah bi-Manāqib 'Ulamā' al-Ma'at al-Āshirah (الكواكب السائرة بمناقب علماء المائة العاشرة) is worthy of notice.

As this work has not yet been published, a rather full account of the book may not be out of place here.

The author tells us in his preface that he has mentioned in this work the dates of all those scholars, saints, Qādīs, kings and grandees, whether of Egypt, Syria, Hijāz, Yaman, Rūm or India, and has added accounts of some events and curious stories and witticisms. He admits that he could not mention all the events that took place in this century, owing to his ignorance of them. Being conscious of the fact that he has omitted much more than he has recorded, he says, by way of apology for the composition of such an incomplete work, that what cannot be fully mentioned should not be left altogether untouched.

To the main chronology he has, by way of invoking divine blessings, prefixed a short biographical account of the Prophet. Then he starts his chronology from the year 901/1495 and concludes it in the year 1000/1591. He has given biographical notes on a large number of scholars of whom the following may be mentioned here:

1. Al-Sakhāwī, author of the well-known but very rare work, al-Daw' al-Lāmi, 'who died in 902/1496.
2. The celebrated Jalāl al-Dīn al-Suyutī who died in 911/1506.

3. Shaykh b. 'Abd Ullāh, great-grandfather of the author (died in 919/1513).
4. Ibn Suwaydā', an eminent Muḥaddith of his age, who was attached to the court of Sultān Maḥmūd Shāh of Gujarāt, who conferred upon him the title of Malik al-Muḥaddithīn (king of traditionists). He died in 919/1513.
5. Aḥmad b. Muḥammad al-Qaṣṭalānī, author of the famous encyclopædic biography of the Prophet entitled al-Mawāhib al-Ladunniyyah, who died in 923/1517. In the note on this scholar, the author relates that Suyūṭī and Qaṣṭalānī were not on good terms with each other, as the former had this grievance against the latter that Qaṣṭalānī used to quote from his work without giving any reference to his name. When Suyūṭī was on his deathbed, Qaṣṭalānī went to him and knocked at his door, whereupon he asked who the intruder might be. Qaṣṭalānī told who he was, and added that he had gone to see him bare-footed and bare-headed in order to be reconciled to him. The dying scholar answered that he had been reconciled, but did not open the door.
6. Jalāl al-Dīn al-Dawwānī, an eminent scholar of his age whom the author mistakenly states to have died in 928/1521, whereas he had passed away twenty years earlier.
7. Muzajjad, author of the well-known book on the Shafi'i Fiqh, entitled al-'Ubāb.
8. Baḥraq al-Ḥaḍramī, a learned man and poet who went to India and joined the court of Sultān Muzaffar of Gujarāt for whom he wrote a biography of the Prophet under the title of Tabṣīrat al-Ḥaḍrat al-Shāhiyyat al-Aḥmaddiyyah bi-sirat al-Ḥaḍrat al-Nabawiyyat al-Aḥmadiyyah (تَبْصِيرُ الْحَضْرَةِ الشَّاهِيَةِ الْأَحْمَدِيَّةِ بِسِيرَةِ الْحَضْرَةِ النَّبَوِيَّةِ الْأَحْمَدِيَّةِ).

9. Ibn al-Hajar al-Haythamī, author of the Sharḥ al-Mishkāt, etc., who died in 974/1566.
10. 'Alī Muttaqī, an Indian scholar of name and fame whom we have known already. He died in 975/1567.
11. Under the year 978/1570, in which the author was born, he gives a detailed account of his birth, education and works. He frankly admits that his mother was an Indian slave-girl who bore no other child save himself.
12. Muḥammad b. Ṭāhir, already known to us, who rightly held the title of "the king of the Indian traditionists." He died in 986/1578.
13. 'Abd al-Nabī, eminent scholar of the court of Akbar, who was afterwards condemned by the Emperor. He died in 990/1582.
14. Quṭb al-Dīn al-Nahrwālī, noticed already. He was a good poet also. Five long poems of his are given in this book.
15. Hakīm Shihāb al-Dīn Maḥmūd b. Shams al-Dīn Sindhī who was attached to the royal court of Gujarāt. The author relates here a curious story. A certain king sent Sultān Maḥmūd some valuable presents, one of which was a beautiful girl, whom Sultān Maḥmūd bestowed on one of his ministers. Before the minister touched the girl, the physician happened to feel her pulse. He at once announced that the girl had been fed and bred in such a poisonous way that whosoever had intercourse with her was sure to die. Presently an experiment was made, and, to the bewilderment of those who were present there, the statement was proved correct. Being asked the reason for this phenomenon, the physician explained that her mother, whilst pregnant, had been fed on poisonous herbs.

So much for the more important of those learned and literary persons whom our author has mentioned in his chronology. As for the kings and worldly dignitaries noticed in the same, the following names are worthy of note :

1. Qā'it-Bey, Sultān of Egypt, who died in 901/1495.
2. Maḥmūd b. Muḥammad, king of Gujarāt who died in 916/1510.
3. Muẓaffar Shāh II king of Gujarāt (d. 932/1526)
4. Bahādur Shāh „ „ (d. 943/1536)
5. Maḥmūd Shāh II „ „ (d. 961/1553)
6. Aḥmad Shāh II „ „ (d. 967/1559)
7. Khudāwand Khān „ „ (d. 968/1560)
8. Quṭb Shāh Sultān of Golkandah (d. 990/1582)

As to the political events mentioned in the book, the following items may be given here :

1. Humāyūn's attack upon Gujarāt and how Bahā-dur Shāh was defeated through the treachery of Muṣṭafā Bahrām.

2. Āṣaf Khān's return from Makkah and his filling the post of Wizārat until he and his master were both killed in 961/1553.
3. The capture of Diu by the Portuguese in 961/1553.
4. Akbar's conquest of Gujarāt in 980/1572. About Akbar the author says that he was a just king but at the same time inclined towards the heretics; he then remarks Wa fi'l-Ishārah mā Yughnī 'ani'l-Kalām, that is, "a hint is enough and no more need be said."
5. An account of Aḥmadābād and of its founder.
6. Muzaffar b. Maḥmūd's recapture of Aḥmadābād, Barwaj and Barodah, after he had defeated the Mughal army in 991/1583 and his loss of them in the following year.

Besides the biographical notices and the brief accounts of certain political events, we find interesting digressions as well, of which the following are worthy of mention :

1. Geographical and historical accounts of Ḥaḍramawt, Aḥqāf, Sabā, Iram Dhāt al-Imad, the grave of Ṣāliḥ the Prophet, the grave of Hūd, etc.
2. A discussion on the possibility of miracles.
3. An account of the occurrences of earthquake and fire at Aden in 914/1508.
4. A discourse on Coffee.

As the author, being himself a poet, took much interest in poetry, we find that his book contains many beautiful extracts from the poetry of those scholars and poets whom he has mentioned. Moreover, being in constant touch with Southern Arabia, he has much to say about the political affairs of Aden, Ḥaḍramawt and Yaman.

As regards the accuracy of the dates, it may be said that it is difficult to question it except in one place, where he is obviously wrong. He mentions Jalāl al-Dīn al-Dawwānī as having died in 928, while the correct date of his death is 908. In two or three places I have noticed that dates given by him slightly differ from those given by Lane-Poole in his Muḥammadan Dynasties. For instance, Maḥmūd b. Muḥammad, king of Gujarāt, died in 916 according to our author, while Lane-Poole puts this even one year later. The year of Aḥmad Shāh's death, according to the Nūr al-Sāfir, is 967, while according to Lane-Poole it is 969¹

It may be noted that a scholar named Al-Sayyid Muḥammad b. Abū Bakr al-Shillī (d.1093/1682) wrote a supplement to this work under the title of al-Sanā' al-Bāhir bi-takmil al-Nūr al-Sāfir. Al-Shillī does not question the accuracy of the Nūr al-Sāfir, and regards it as a useful and valuable work. The necessity for writing a supplement, as he himself says, arose from the fact that the author of the original book omitted many noteworthy persons.

¹ Frishtah and E. de Zambaur give the same dates as Lane-poole. But according to Hājji Dabir, Ahmad Shāh was killed in 967 as stated in Al-Nur al-Sāfir and not in 969. (Vide Zafar al-Walsh bi-Muẓaffar Wālish, Vol. II, 478).

As regards the style and Arabic of the book, one may safely say that it is lucid, simple and straightforward. The work was completed on Friday the 12th of Rabī' al-Thānī, 1012/1603.

This brief account may be concluded with this remark that the Nūr al-Sāfir is a useful chronological work and deserves to be edited on western scientific lines. The Durrat al-Kāminah, the first link in this biographical series, is being edited by Mr. Krenkow. The MSS of the Daw' al-Lāmi' are very rare and defective. Then comes this work with its supplement al-Sanā' al-Bāhir; and the succeeding links have already been published.

III. BIOGRAPHIES OF THE PROPHET : TWO WORKS

(1) Ithāf al-Ḥuḍrat al-'Azīzah li-'Uyūn al-Sirat al-Wajīzah (انحاف الحضرة العزيزة لعيون السيرة الوجيزه) by Muḥyī al-Dīn 'Abd al-Qādir, the author of the Nūr al-Sāfir. It is a short biography of the Prophet and his companions. There is nothing special about this work, except that the narration is lucid, concise, and almost free from unhistorical statements such as are generally found in works written by Ṣūfīs and mystic writers. It consists of two parts and an appendix. The first part deals with the biography of the Prophet in four chapters. The second part, divided into ten chapters, contains the short biographies of those ten companions of the Prophet who were assured by him that they would enter Paradise. The Khātimah (concluding portion) deals with the merits and excellences of the companions of the Prophet.

(2) The other Arabic biography of the Prophet written in India, worthy of notice, is Al-Sirat al-Muḥammadiyyah (السيرة المحمدية), composed by Karāmat 'Alī b. Fāḍil Muḥammad Ḥayāt 'Alī. It is a voluminous work containing six hundred closely lithographed pages of 15 inch size, with 35 lines in each page, and was composed shortly before the Mutiny. It was written under the royal patronage of the Nizām of Ḥaydarābād, to whom it was dedicated. It is not a mere compilation. The author has taken pains in examining and weighing all the traditions and events recorded. It cannot be called a critical work, according to the modern standard of investigation, but at the same time it does not contain those Ḥadīth which are considered to be false by Muslim scholars themselves. He exercised his own critical judgement in dealing with controversial points. The concluding part of the work contains a short history of the rightly directed Caliphs.

On the biography of the Prophet a large number of books have been written, among which the voluminous work entitled al-Mawāhib al-Ladunniyyah by Al-Qaṣṭalānī (923/1517) is perhaps the most important from the Muslim standpoint, but the biography under consideration supersedes it as far as accuracy and critical judgement are concerned. 'Alī 'Abbās Chiryākotī, a contemporary scholar and a worthy teacher of a worthy pupil, such as Mawlānā Shiblī, has written a long Arabic poem in praise of the book, of which this couplet may be quoted here :

(Do not wonder if the book has surpassed the books of the previous writers, because wine possesses a merit which the grape does not). The poet means to say that, just as wine excels the grapes of which it is made, so this book surpasses all the works from which it has drawn its materials. This second hemistich has been adopted in this verse from a couplet of al-Mutanabbī.

IV. OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL WORKS : FIVE

(1) Al-Rawḍ al-Nāḍir fī man Ismuhū ‘Abd al-Qādir (الروض الناصر في من اسمه عبد القادر) by ‘Abd al-Qādir al-‘Aydārūs, already noticed. It contains, as indicated by its very title, biographical notices of those Muslim religious and secular worthies who were named ‘Abd al-Qādir. It is, so far as is known to the writer of the present thesis, the first book of its kind. It contains short biographies of about 40 persons named ‘Abd al-Qādir.

(2) Zahr al-Riyāḍ wa Zulāl al-Ḥiyāḍ (زهرة الرياض وزلال الحياض) by al-Hasan b. ‘Alī b. Ṣḥadqam. The author was an ‘Arab and was born at Madīnah, but in his youth he went to India and attached himself to the Nizām Shāhī House of Aḥmadnagar. One of the kings gave him his daughter in marriage and thus he rose to a high position, but the fall of the house reduced his circumstances and he had to leave India for Arabia, although he soon returned. The date of his death is not known. He was a learned man and a poet. The Sulāfat al-‘Aṣr contains a biographical note on him, with a specimen of his poetry. Besides the present work, he was the author of another work entitled al-Jawāhir al-Nizāmiyyah.

The work under consideration is a large biographical dictionary, alphabetically arranged and written in a simple easy style. Though it is a sort of compilation, or perhaps an abridgement of previous works, such as the Wafayāt al-A'yān, etc., from which the compiler has taken most of his material, with a few additions from other sources, its value must not be underrated, for besides biographical notes, it contains many digressions of historical, geographical and literary interest.

(3) Sulāfat al-‘Aṣr fī Maḥāsin al-Shu‘arā’ bi-Kull Miṣr (سلافه العصر في محاسن الشعراء بكل مصر) by al-Sayyid ‘Alī Ṣadr al-Dīn b. Aḥmad Nizām b. Ma‘šūm, generally known as Sayyid ‘Alī Khān or Ibn Ma‘šūm. The author was a descendant of the eminent philosopher Ghiyāth al-Dīn Maṣūm Shīrāzī. He was born in Madīnah in 1052/1642 and while a boy of sixteen, joined his father Nizām al-Dīn Aḥmad, who stood high in the favour of Sultān ‘Abd Ullāh Quṭb Shāh at Haydarābād. A year after the death of that king (1083/1672) he lost his father and was imprisoned by the new Sultān Abu’l-Ḥasan, but he managed somehow or other to escape and reached the court of ‘Ālamgīr, who received him with favour, conferred upon him the title of Khān under the name of Sayyid ‘Alī, appointed him to the Dīwānī of Burhānpūr. Towards the end of his life he left India for Persia, and settled at Shīrāz where he died in 1117/1705. He was an eminent man of letters, well-versed in poetical art and belles lettres, and was the author of several compositions.

The present work, like the Nūr al-Sāfir, already reviewed, is a link in an important biographical series of poets, started by Tha'ālibī (429/1037) some six centuries back in the form of the compilation of his well-known Yatimat al-Dahr, and carried on by later writers, al-Bā_kharzī (467/1074) and Iṣfahānī (597/1200) under the title of Dumyat al-Qaṣr and Kharidat al-Qaṣr respectively. As a matter of fact, the present work is a supplement to a similar work entitled Rayḥānat al-Alibbā' by Shihāb al-Dīn Aḥmad al-Khafājī, who died in 1069/1658. The author tells us in the preface that for a long time it had been an earnest desire of his to contribute to the literary world something about the poetical geniuses of his time (i e., the 11th century) on the lines of the Yatimat al-Dahr and Dumyat al-Qaṣr, but various obstacles stood in his way, until he happened to get hold of a copy of the Rayḥānat al-Alibbā' which he liked very much as it was compiled on almost the same plan as he himself was aspiring to follow. He found no fault with this work, except that the author of the Rayḥānah omitted many poetical worthies. To make up for this deficiency, he at once sat down to compile the present work, which in the first place deals with those eminent and distinguished poets of the eleventh century whom the author of the Rayḥānah missed out, and in the second place fills a small gap of 13 years that lies between the date of Shihāb al-Dīn al-Khafājī's death and that of the compilation of the Sulāfah, which the author himself gives as 1082/1671. Moreover, our author mentions again some of those poets whom al-Kḥafājī has included, but with this restriction that Ibn Ma'sūm does not repeat those verses which al-Kḥafājī had quoted.

1. Tha'ālibī is said to have followed the lines laid down by Hārūn b. 'Alī (d. 288/900) in his book "Al-Bārī" (البارع) vide Khalīfah, II, 4.

This work contains the following sections :

Section I. Poets of Makkah and Madīnah.

„ II. Poets of Syria and Egypt.

„ III. Poets of Yaman.

„ IV. Poets of 'Ajam, 'Irāq and Baḥrayn.

„ V. Poets of Maghrib.

Altogether one hundred and twenty-four poets have been noticed, of whom some half a dozen are Indians or connected with India. This book is not merely an anthology but a biographical work as well. Its biographical notices are generally longer and more detailed than those of the Yatimah or Dumyat al Qaṣr. But it is to be regretted that the style is ornate and flowery, and this considerably mars its utility.

(4) Al-Darajāt al-Rafī'ah fī l-Ṭabaqāt al-Imām-īyyah min al-Shī'ah by the same author, is a collection of the lives of the eminent men who held the Shī'ah faith from the very beginning of Islām to the time of the author, i e., the early part of the eleventh century of the Hijra.

The author states in the preface that as there was no similar work in existence, he felt the necessity of compiling a book dealing with lives of the eminent Shī'ahs. About Nūr Ullāh Shustarī's Majālis al-Mu'minīn which exactly covers the same scope, he remarks that in the first place Nūr Ullāh has mistakenly included among the Shī'ites many persons who were not really such, and in the second place, that the work is in Persian and not in Arabic.

This book is divided into twelve parts, called Ṭabaqāt. The first Ṭabaqah, which deals with the Companions of the Prophet, consists of four Muqaddimah (introduction) and two chapters. As this work has not yet been published, a full list of the contents may not be undesirable.

The first Ṭabaqah :

- I. Introduction Definition of a Ṣaḥābī.
- II. „ The position of a Ṣaḥābī.
- III. „ Classification of the Companions : Maqbūl and Mar-dūd.
- IV. „ Regarding those Companions who joined 'Alī at the end.

I. Chapter Hāshimite Companions.

II. „ Other Companions.

The subject-matter of the other Ṭabaqah is as follows :

- | | | |
|------------|----------------|--|
| The second | Ṭabaqah | The Tābi'ūn (companions of the Prophet's Companions). |
| The third | „ | Those Muḥaddithīn who received Ḥadīth directly from the Imāms. |
| The fourth | „ | All the scholars and theological doctors. |
| The fifth | „ | The philosophers and scholastic theologians. |

The sixth	Ṭabaqah	The scholars of Arabic literature.
The seventh	„	Ṣūfīs.
The eighth	„	Emperors and kings.
The ninth	„	Nobles.
The tenth	„	Ministers.
The eleventh	„	Poets.

As far as one can gather from all the published catalogues of the libraries, the Berlin Library alone contains a manuscript of this work¹ and that is incomplete, having only two Ṭabaqāt (the first and fourth) out of the twelve.

(5) Subḥat al-Marjān fi Āthār Hindūstān (سبحة المرجان في الآثار هندوستان) by Sayyid Ghulām ‘Alī Āzād Bilgrāmī.² The author was a member of the house of the Wāsiṭī Sayyids, settled in Bilgrām, and was born in 1116/1704. His father had held for seven years the appointment of Nā’ib in Bhakar and Sistān, and Āzād himself acted as Nā’ib in the latter place from 1142 to 1147/1734. In 1150/1737 he went on a pilgrimage to Makkah where he stayed for two years, in the course of which he completed his studies of Ḥadīth with Muḥammad Ḥayāt Sindhī and ‘Abd al-Wahhāb. After his return to India, he settled in Aurangābād where he stood in very high favour of Nizām al-Dawlah Nāṣir Jang and his brothers from whom he never accepted any office. He died in 1200/

1. Berlin, No. 10050

2. European writers generally spell Bilgrām as ‘Balgram’, but this is incorrect. The late Sayyid ‘Alī Bilgrāmī used to spell the word with ‘ī’.

1785. He was an eminent scholar, well versed in all branches of Muslim learning. He learnt the art of poetry from his maternal grandfather, Sayyid 'Abd al-Jalīl Bilgrāmī. He is the only Indian poet who left seven Diwāns of Arabic poetry. He was the author of several works both in Arabic and in Persian.

The subject-matter of this book is, as indicated by its title, India. It is divided into four chapters, the first of which deals with the excellence and eminence of India and with the references to that country in the Qur'ānic commentators and Ḥadīth. The author has quoted many Ḥadīth and remarks of the commentators on the Qur'ān relating the story of Adam and Eve being thrown down from Paradise on the mountain named after Adam in Ceylon.

The second chapter is devoted to the biographical sketches of Indian Muslim scholars and learned men. This chapter is the most important in the whole book. It contains 43 biographical notices arranged almost in chronological order. He begins this chapter with a short account of Abū Ḥafṣ Rabī', one of the Ṭaba' Ṭābi'in, who went to Sind and died there in 160/776, and concludes it with an account of himself. This work is not only one of the most important sources of the present thesis, but also of all the later similar works, such as the Abjad al-'Ulūm and the Tadhkirah-i-'Ulamā'-i-Hind. The author wrote another book of the same nature but in Persian, under the title of Ma'āthir al-Kirām, which, though chiefly intended to deal with the biographies of the eminent scholars and saints of Bilgrām, the native place of the author, contains one hundred and fifty short notices of the scholars of other parts of India also.

The third chapter of the Subḥat al-Marjān is on rhetoric and sets forth the beauties of prose and poetry. In this chapter the author has shown some originality which will be discussed later on in connection with philology and rhetoric.

The fourth chapter is on love, from both the Indian and the Arabian standpoint.

The first chapter really comprises a separate work of the same author, entitled Shammāmat al-‘Anbar but he has incorporated it into the present work also.

V. TRAVEL : ONE WORK

There is only one Arabic work of travel, the credit of which may be given to India, as it was written by a scholar who, though a foreigner, lived the greater part of his life in India. The title of this travel-book is Salwat al-Gharīb wa Uswat al-Arīb, and the name of the author is Sayyid ‘Alī Khān ibn Ma‘šūm, already noticed as the author of the Sulāfah. In this work the author gives a detailed account of his journey from Makkah to Gulkandah at the call of his father who was already there in the service of the king of Gulkandah, ‘Abd Ullāh b. Muḥammad Qutb Shāh. The author, while still a boy of tender age, left Makkah on Sha‘bān 6th, 1066/1655, and reached his destination after three years on Rabi‘ al-Awwal 22nd, 1069/1658. The work we are considering was completed thirteen years later.

It is an interesting work from three points of view—geographical, biographical and purely literary.

Among matters of geographical interest, besides a short geography of India, taken from Mas'ūdī, it contains information concerning al-Bayḍā', al-Sa'diyyah, al-Qanfadhah—an ancient port of Makkah now replaced by Jiddah—Bandar al-Laḥya, Makrān, Bandar Mukhā, Chitāpūr, Rājapūr, Bijāpūr, Gulbarg and Gulkandah. The author also dwells on certain special characteristics of seas, ambergris, fishes, Indian vegetables (such as spices, cocoanut, mango, betel and sugar-cane) and Indian animals (such as parrots, peacocks and elephants). While speaking of the last-mentioned animal, he removes some wrong notions that prevailed among the people. He says that the trunk of an elephant is hollow and not solid, that its cry is not like that of a human infant, as generally believed; that the animal can sit down, and that the generative organ of the she-elephant lies, like that of other animals, between her hinder legs and not between her forelegs.

Among matters of biographical interest, the following items may be mentioned here :

(1) A short account of the ancient Hindū kings and the Hindū religion, taken from the works of previous writers, chiefly from those of Mas'ūdī, and also an account of Humāyūn.

(2) Short accounts of Arabian scholars attached to the court of the king of Gulkandah.

(3) A description of the Muḥarram mourning of the people of the Deccan.

(4) A description of the royal marriage of Hārūn and al-Mā'mūn, the 'Abbāsīd Caliphs.

As to the matters of purely literary interest, this work is so full of them that it may be said that the book is a work of literary nature rather than of a geographical or biographical only. Being a man of poetical talents and of a highly literary bent of mind, the author could not write a book even on travel without embellishing it rather to the extreme, with digressions and observations which, though important from a purely literary standpoint, had nothing to do with the main theme. From the literary point of view the book is so interesting that it is difficult for a reader of literary taste to leave it unfinished when he has once begun it. Of the literary matters the following are important:

(1) Complaints against the hardness of the time and how unfavourable and antagonistic it is to the learned and men of letters.

(2) Lamentations upon being away from home.

(3) The merits and demerits of travel: a sort of debate, representing the opposite points of view about travel, about which quotations from the Qur'ān, Ḥadīth and other sayings are given.

(4) A pathetic description of a departure from Makkah. Many beautiful verses are given here and there.

(5) Literary and intellectual witticisms concerning money, fish, coffee, wind, the wonders of the sea, a sea voyage, a boat, a parrot, an elephant, etc. About coffee he relates an interesting story. Once a certain godly man said, in reply to a certain Turkish officer who had prohibited the drinking of coffee: "It cannot be condemned." Being asked the reason, he rejoined: "Because the numerical value of the word Qahwah is exactly equal to that of al-Qawiyy, one of the names of God."

About the elephant he has given many similes. One may be quoted here:

هذا هو الفيل الذى يبدو المعجوب لنا به
ليل قد اقرس النهار فبان فى انيا به

(This elephant with his wonderful tusks is like a night that has preyed upon the day and so it is seen in its teeth).

(6) Verses from the poetry of many poets whom he happened to meet during his travels.

PHILOLOGY

The contribution of India to the philological branch of Arabic literature may be discussed under three heads, viz., Grammar, Lexicography, and Rhetoric.

GRAMMAR

Though it is true that the art of original composition on Arabic Grammar reached its zenith about the end of the seventh century, so that after Ibn Hishām (d. 761/1359), the last of the four famous grammarians (the other three being Zamakhsharī, the author of the Mufaṣṣal, Ibn Ḥājib, the author of the Kāfiyah, and Ibn Mālik, the author of the Alfiyyah), no Muslim succeeded in producing a grammatical work on original lines, based on researches of his own, yet students of Arabic grammar did not remain idle in later periods, and what they achieved is by no means insignificant.

The first book on grammar that may be mentioned here in connection with the contribution of India to this branch of Arabic literature is a commentary, entitled Ta'liq al-Farā'id (تعلیق الفرائد), on Ibn Mālik's Tahsīl al-Fawā'id wa Takmil al-Maqāṣid, composed by Muḥammad b. Abū Bakr b. 'Umar al-Damāmīnī, an eminent scholar and grammarian of Egypt, who, during the latter part of his life, was attracted to India by the royal patronage of one of her princes. The author wrote this work at Cambay in Gujarāt where he arrived in 820/1417 and dedicated it to Sultān Aḥmad Shāh of Gujarāt (814-846).

The second work is by the same author, a commentary entitled al-Manhal al-Sāfi (المنهل الصافي), on Muḥammad b. 'Uthmān b. 'Umar Balkhī's Wāfi. The author wrote this commentary for another king of the same name, i e., Aḥmad Shāh Bahmanī (825-838), in 825/1421 when he was on the way to Aḥsanābād (Gulbarga).

The third book is the same author's commentary, entitled Tuḥfat al-Gharīb (تجدة الغريب), on Ibn Hishām's Mughnī al-Labīb. This commentary was composed in 824/1421, when the author was in Nahrwālah. All these three works produced by one and the same author under the patronage of the Indian princes and in India are of high value. Suyūṭī speaks highly of this author in his work Bughyat al-Wu'āt.

Next to these three works comes an Arabic syntax entitled al-Irshād or Irshād al-Nāḥiyy, (الإرشاد أو إرشاد الناحية), composed by Shihāb al-Dīn al-Dawlatābādī. He was born at Dawlatābād in the Deccan during the latter half of the eighth century of the Hijra. He completed his studies at Delhi with Qādī 'Abd al-Muqtadīr and Maulānā Khwājagī, eminent scholars of Delhi in those days. When Timūr invaded the Indian Metropolis, Maulānā Khwājagī and Shihāb al-Dīn had to leave for some other place. The teacher settled in a village called Kālpī and the pupil went so far as Jawnpūr, where Ibrāhīm Shāh Sharqī (804-844/1400-1440) received him with honour and made him Qādī. The king further showed his appreciation of the newly-made Qādī's abilities and learning by bestowing upon him the dignified title of Malik al-'Ulamā', which the recipient rightly deserved. He was the author of many works, and died in or before the year 849/1445.

Al-Irshād is a text-book on Arabic syntax and is superior to the celebrated Kāfiyah of Ibn Ḥājib, in the opinion of Indian scholars.¹ Apart from all those qualities which make it a good Matn (text-book), it has a strange characteristic which no other book on Grammar (and this peculiarity is possible only in books on Grammar) possesses ; this has been well explained in the author's own words. He says :

و تيسر لى بتيسير الله ايراد النظم لا حكامه فى ضمن التعبير مثلث لكل
حكم تمثيلا يمتطى بعبارة او بعبارة ما سبق او سبى -

(With the help of God it has been easy for me to set down instances of rules in words which embody the very definition of each. I have illustrated each rule by an example which fits in with the very words of the rule or with the preceding or following phrases and sentences.)

This peculiarity may be illustrated by a similar definition in English of a pronoun, viz., "A pronoun is a word which is used in place of a noun." Here the very definition of a pronoun contains an example of one, viz., 'which.'

To write a text-book maintaining this odd peculiarity throughout is no easy task. Yet the author of the Irshād has successfully overcome the difficult restrictions which he voluntarily, though pedantically, imposed upon himself. A few examples are given below :

من الحروف الحاره من التى يراد منها ابتداء لعائته فى المكان او ما يرجع

1. See Wakīl Aḥmad's Akḥbār-i-Nuhāt, p. 119.

من البيان والبناء لالصاق الشى بالشى وعلى الاستعلاء الشى على الشى و ق
لوقوع معنى المعلن فى زمان و مكان و الى لبلوع الشى الى غاية و عن للبعد و
المجاوزه عن الشى و حتى الحصول شى حتى منتهاه والكاف لكون الشى بشى
آخر معاً -

Here is a corresponding passage from the Kāfiyah for comparison :

فمن لا يتداء و التبيين و البناء للاصقان و على الاستعلاء و قى للظرفيه و
عن للمجاوزه و الكاف للتنبه -

This comparison of corresponding passages from the two works gives at once a clear idea of the characteristic of the Irshād.

Though the Irshād does not enjoy the wide reputation and publicity of the Kāfiyah, yet a careful comparison between the two works shows that the Irshād is the better of the two in the arrangement and treatment of the subject. Its peculiarity of illustrating a rule with the very words of its description has rendered it briefer and more comprehensive than the Kāfiyah. The reputation and popularity of the latter is due to the fact that it was written among an Arabic-speaking people and at a time when there was no such text-book in existence, while the Irshād was written in India where Arabic was never spoken (except on its western coasts and even that for a short time only), and at a time when several text-books had been composed. Though the well-known saying of the East that a second impression always excels the first, decides in favour of the Irshād, yet it cannot deprive the Kāfiyah of the superiority given to it by another equally well-known proverb, to wit, al-Faḍl li'l-Mutaqaddim. Hājji Khalīfah speaks of the Irshād in the following terms :

هو متن لطيف تعمق في تهذيبه كل التعمق و تأنق في ترتيبه حق التأنق -
(It is a fine text-book for the systematising of which the author has made best use of his careful thinking, and for the elegance of the arrangement of which he did what could be done.)

The Irshād has been commented upon by several scholars. Hājji Khalīfah mentions the name of Abu'l-Faḍl al-Khaṭīb Kāzrūnī, who was one of the teachers of Mubārak, father of Abu'l-Faḍl, who speaks highly of him (al-Khaṭīb) in the Ā'in-i-Akbarī. Brockelmann gives two other names, but they are not Indian. 'Abd al-Nabī al-Shaṭṭārī, an eminent Indian scholar of Jahāngir's time, also wrote a commentary upon it.

Shihāb al-Dīn wrote also a commentary on the Kāfiyah, which is known as the Sharḥ al-Hindī (شرح الهندي) and has been further commented upon by no less than four scholars, as Hājji Khalīfah says. The Sharḥ al-Hindī is one of the most important commentaries on the Kāfiyah (the others being one by Raḍī al-Dīn and one by Jāmī, the famous poet of Persia). Jāmī is said to have written his commentary in response to an impetus he received from an Indian scholar. The story says that one of Jāmī's sons went to India, and a certain scholar there asked him who he was, and receiving the reply, remarked contemptuously, "Oh, I see! You are the son of Jāmī, the poet." For a poet has never been esteemed by scholars. When Jāmī heard the story, he at once resolved to prove his scholarly abilities, and so he composed his commentary. When this learned work was brought to India, the same scholar, after examining it, made the observation that there was nothing new in it and that it was based on the Sharḥ al-Hindī.¹

The truth of the story may be doubted, but there is no doubt about the fact that save for the discussion on Hāsil wa Maḥṣūl which the Sharḥ-i-Jāmī contains, there is not much difference between the two commentaries. Jāmī must have kept the Sharḥ al-Hindī before him while composing his own commentary. If this remark of Hājji Khalīfah that² these two commentaries (Shihāb al-Dīn's and Jāmī's) supplied materials for the well-known Turkish commentary on the Kāfiyah, does not shed sufficient light on this inference that both the Arabic commentaries are similar, it does, however, sufficiently prove the value of the Sharḥ al-Hindī.

In short, Shihāb al-Dīn wrote two works on Arabic syntax: one a text-book and the other a commentary. His text-book, if it does not really excel the Kāfiyah, is certainly a serious rival to this book, while his Sharḥ has been a source and basis for one of the best commentaries on the Kāfiyah. Apart from the already noticed three grammatical works, composed by Al-Damāmīnī, if only these two books by Shihāb al-Dīn had been produced in India, even then the contribution of this non-Arabic speaking country to the grammatical section of Arabic literature would have been worthy of attention. But we find that several other works have been composed in India. 'Abd al-Rashīd Jawnpurī, already noticed, was the author of two works on Grammar: one, Tadhkirat al-Naḥw (تذکرہ النحوی)، and the other, Bidāyat al-Naḥw (بداية النحو). The latter book has a peculiarity of its own. All the instances given in this work have been taken from Fiqh. 'Abd al-Hakīm of Sialkot wrote two extensive super-commentaries on Jāmī's commentary : one is the complement of the unfinished super-commentary by 'Abd al-Ghafūr, the pupil of Jāmī, on the Sharḥ-i-Jāmī, and the other is a gloss on this super-commentary of 'Abd al-Ghafūr. Both these super-commentaries have been published in Constantinople. In addition to the works mentioned above, several other books on Grammar have been written in India (vide the Appendix), of which the commentary of Shihāb al-Dīn's pupil, Ṣafī b. Naṣīr, entitled Ghāyāt al-Taḥqīq (غايات التحقيق) on the Kāfiyah, may be mentioned here. Hājji Khālīfah speaks highly of it.

1. Wakīl Ahmad, Akhbār-i-Nuhāt, p. 125

2. Khalīfah, V. 12.

Before this account of the works on Arabic grammar produced in India is concluded, a rather curious treatise by 'Alī Mahā'imī, whom we have known, may be mentioned here. It is not exactly a grammar, but it deals with the grammatical analysis of the opening verse of the Sūrah Baqarah : (ذَلِكَ الْكِتَابُ لَا رَيْبَ فِيهِ). In this small book the learned author has worked out 128,344,524 different ways of analysing this small collection of a few words. This work is not known to be still in existence. Ghulām 'Alī Āzād has given a fairly long extract from it in his Subḥat al-Marjān. This wonderful grammatical achievement of an Indian scholar may also go to prove that India has not failed in producing scholars well versed in Arabic learning.

LEXICOGRAPHY

As to the contribution of India to Arabic Lexicography, we find that three of the first class Arab dictionaries are works of scholars, connected with India in some way or the other. One of them is of foreign origin, but his father settled at Lahore, where he was born, and hence he is called Lahorī or Hindī. The second is a genuine foreigner, but he paid two visits to India and received royal patronage from the king of Delhi. The third is a native of India, was born in India, and received his early education here, and then went abroad in pursuit of knowledge, to shine eventually like the sun in the sky of Arabic learning.

The first is Raḍī al-Dīn Ḥasan al-Saghānī al-Hindī (650/1252), who has already been noticed in the discussion on the contribution of India to Arabic literature and Ḥadīth. He was a great traditionist and philologist and wrote a number of books. Some of his philological works may be mentioned here :

(1) Al-'Ubāb (العماب), which is one of the standard dictionaries and which "after the Muḥkam, is the greatest of the lexicological works composed since the age of the Ṣiḥāḥ, to the time of the author of the Muzhir, of those known to him."¹ Nothing more need be said of this work, as it is too well-known to require any further remark.

(2) Takmilah wa Dhayl wa Ṣilah (تكملة و ذيل و صلة), a sort of critical supplement to the Ṣiḥāḥ. The first two parts are complete, but the third remained incomplete owing to the death of the author. It runs up to the section of the letter 'Ayn. In one of these parts the author rectifies the mistakes made by the author of the Ṣiḥāḥ, and in another he has collected those words of importance which the Ṣiḥāḥ does not contain. Neither of these tasks is easy or ordinary in any way, because to write a new dictionary is not so difficult as to criticise it, to point out its mistakes, and to supply its omissions, just as Dozy's Arabic dictionary supplies such deficiencies.

(3) The third work of Ṣaghānī with which we are here concerned is the Kitāb al-ʿAqdād (كتاب الاقداد), which deals with words of opposite meanings. It is a small but useful treatise. One of the characteristics of the Arabic language is that it has many words which express two opposite meanings. For example, the word Bayʿ means both 'buying' and 'selling', the word Sarīm means both 'day' and 'night', and the word Masīḥ signifies "Christ" and also "Anti-Christ" (Dajjāl). This tract contains all such words arranged in alphabetical order.

(4) Kitāb al-Dhi'b (كتاب الذئب). Another feature of the Arabic language is its large number of synonymous words. In Arabic for instance, there are 21 words for 'light', 52 for 'darkness', 29 for the 'sun', 88 for the 'well', 350 for the 'lion' or 'tiger', 100 for the 'camel', and 255 for the 'she-camel'.¹ The Kitāb al-Dhi'b contains all the words in the Arabic language for the 'wolf'.

All these works are sufficient to prove what a great command this scholar had over the Arabic language.

The second great lexicographer who has been associated with India, in the sense of having paid two visits to that country, is Majd al-Dīn Fīrūzābādī, author of the well-known Arabic dictionary Qāmūs. He came to India for the first time in the reign of Fīrūz

1. Jurjī Zaydān, Ta'rikh ʿĀdāb al-Lughat al-ʿArabīyyah, 1, 49.

Shāh Tughlaq (ruled 1351-1388) and the second time during the reign of Maḥmūd Shāh Tughlaq II.¹ The Qāmūs cannot be claimed as an Indian product, but at the same time no one can ignore the significance of the fact that the royal patronage of the Indian courts was extended to the author of it.

The third great lexicon-writer, who was a real native of India but left it for Arabia and Egypt in search of knowledge, is Sayyid Murtaḍā Zabīdī, already noticed, who was destined to write a very comprehensive and extensive commentary entitled Tāju'l-'Urūs (تاج العروس) on the Qāmūs. This work is also too well-known to need any discussion here.

In addition to these three great lexicographers, there has been in India another group of scholars of the same number (i e., three) who were well versed in this branch of Arabic philology.

One of them is 'Abd al-Rashīd Thattawī who, by order of Shāhjahān, composed a dictionary of Arabic words entitled Muntakhab al-Lughāt, using Persian as the vehicle. This work is much used in India.

The second of these scholars is 'Abd al-Raḥīm of Ṣafīpūr, who flourished about the end of the Mughal period and died shortly before the Mutiny. He composed a voluminous dictionary entitled Muntaha al-'Irāb, consisting of three volumes, but here again the medium is Persian. In India this lexicon is so much used that it has almost replaced all other dictionaries.

The last of this trio is Muftī Sa'd-Ullāh of Murādābād, who wrote under the title of al-Qawl al-

1. Huart's Arabic Literature, p. 383.

Mānūs fī Ṣifāt al-Qāmūs (القول المانوس فى صفات القاموس) a detailed and full appreciation of the Qāmūs in the form of a book of more than three hundred pages. This work is so deserving of attention that though it does not fall within the scope of the present thesis, as the author died about 14 years after the Mutiny, it may not be unsuitable to give here the headings of some of the thirty-five chapters of which it consists, in order to show its nature and value:

- | | |
|---------|--|
| Chapter | I. An account of the author's life. |
| „ | II. The name of the book explained. |
| „ | III. The actual number of the words contained in the Qāmūs . He has not only counted up all the actual words, but he has also given enumerations of the words in each section. He says that the Qāmūs deals with 10406 words altogether, of which 5777 are also contained in the Ṣiḥāḥ while the rest are additional words. |

- Chapter X. Hints as to the way of consulting the lexicon.
- „ XI. The peculiarities of the author's style.
- „ XIII. Glosses on the difficult passages.
- XIV-XXIII. The mistakes of the author pointed out under various heads.
- „ XXIV. The author's wrong criticism on the author of the Ṣiḥāḥ.
- „ XXV. Those words in the Ṣiḥāḥ which the author of the Qāmūs has omitted from his work.
- „ XXVI. Those meanings of certain words which are given in the Ṣiḥāḥ but not found in the Qāmūs.
- „ XXX. The unnecessary repetition in the Qāmūs.
- „ XXXI. Occasional brevity to the point of obscurity.
- „ XXXIII. A reply to a critic's severe criticism of the author.

This article on the contribution of India to Arabic lexicography would remain incomplete if at the end mention were not made of a most important work written in India, which is not exactly a lexicon in the proper sense of that term but a dictionary of technical terms, I mean, the Kashshāf Isṭilāḥāt al-Funūn (كشاف اصطلاحات الفنون), composed by Muḥammad 'Alī al-Fārūqī of Thānābhawan (in the district of Muẓaffarnagar) about the middle of the 12th century of Hījra, the date of its completion being 1156. This work, as indicated by its very title, deals with all the technicalities of all the Arabic arts and sciences. It is of immense help as a reference book, and has been published in two large volumes under the auspices of the Asiatic Society of Bengal.

There is another Indian work of equal importance with the Kashshāf which, though not connected with philology, should be mentioned at this juncture if it is to be noticed at all. This is a bibliographical work entitled Kashf al-Hujub wa'l-Astār 'an Asmā' al-Kutab wa'l-Asfār (كشف الحجب والاستار عن اسماء الكتب والاسفار), compiled by I'jāz Husayn Kantūrī, a Shī'ah scholar of the 13th century. This work is a bibliographical lexicon of all the works of the Shī'ah authors, the names of the books being arranged alphabetically as in the Kashf al-Zunūn.

RHETORIC, PROSODY, ETC.

Now to turn to the third and last branch of Arabic philology, the most important text-book ever written on the science of rhetoric 'Ilm al-Balāghah' is Al-Sakkākī's Miftāḥ. On this text, many commentaries and super-commentaries, glosses and super-glosses have been written in various countries, interested directly or indirectly in Arabic literature. India as a country interested indirectly in the literature and culture of Arabs has not fallen short of a reasonable expectation in her contribution to Arabic 'Ilm al-Balāghah', a science comprehending several branches, for which the English language seems to have no single equivalent, unless it is literally translated as the 'science of elegant speech.'

The first Indian scholar who wrote on one of the branches of the 'Ilm al-Balāghah is, as far as I know, Raḍī al-Dīn Ḥasan al-Ṣaghānī al-Hindī whom we have noticed many times. He wrote a treatise on prosody entitled Mukhtaṣar al-'Arūḍ, a manuscript of which is to be found in the Berlin Library under the number 7127. It is a short but comprehensive treatise and deals with all the principles of prosody.

Then comes the great Persian poet of India, Amīr Khusraw. His father, Amīr Sayf al-Dīn, in the reign of Changīz Khān left his native country, Māwarā' al-nahr, came to India, and settled at a place near Delhi, where he married the daughter of 'Imād al-Mulk, of whom Amīr Khusraw was born in 561/1165. At a very early age, Amīr Khusraw displayed an extraordinary poetical genius and a strong disposition for the study of every kind of science and art, and consequently he very soon arose in eminence as a scholar and poet and met with the highest distinction in the assemblies of princes. In Ṣūfism he became the disciple of the famous Nizām al-Dīn Awliyā' who had a high regard and great love for his spiritual pupil. Amīr Khusraw served seven different kings, all of whom were favourably disposed towards him. He is regarded as the best and the greatest the Persian poets of India, and is the author of several works. He died in 725/1324, six months after the death of his beloved spiritual leader. His wonderful genius and rare talents enabled him to compose a voluminous and 'miraculous' work entitled I'jāz-i-Khusrawī on the art of rhetoric. This book is in Persian, but he has given Arabic examples, all his own, of all the rhetorical devices and figures of speech that he has mentioned in this work. Amīr Khusraw invented many a literary beauty, one or two examples of which may be given here to show that an Indian mind, whether interested in Arabic or Persian literature, has never failed to respond wherever there is any call for artificial contrivances, for far-fetched conventions and for an excessive use of fancy and imagination.

One of them is what is termed Tarjamat al-Lafẓ (ترجمة اللفظ) by its author. This figure of speech lies in using two words which are synonymous, but of two different languages, e.g.,

إذا دعا لعطاياك انجماً نادى غدا النجوم كما في مسرة شادى

(When a proclaimer invites stars for your gifts, the stars become just like a singing bird that sings for joy.)

Here the figure lies in the use of the two words Anjuman and Nādī, and also in Masarrat and Shādī. The first two words (the former in Persian and the latter in Arabic) mean 'meeting', while the last two (the first in Arabic and the second in Persian) mean 'happiness', but here the Persian meanings are not to be taken.

Another interesting figure of speech invented by Amīr Khusraw that may be mentioned here is Dhu Ru'yatayn, which lies in the composition of verses in one language in such a way that they may be changed into another language with a change of dots and diacritical marks. For instance.¹

رشیدی ندیدی مرادی لجائی رمالی ایامی تباری نسائی

(My dutiful friend, my comrade, my hope, my salvation, the competition of the ladies has thrown me into disappointment.) This couplet, with the change of dots and diacritical points, is read in Persian thus :

رسیدی بدیدی مرادی بخانی زمالی بهاشی بیاری بشانی

(You arrived and saw me last night in an inn. Sit for a while with me. You deserve friendship.)

A still more ingenious figure of speech is what Amīr Khusraw calls Qalb al-Lisānayn, which is found in those verses which shift from one language to another, if they are read reversely from the last letter (not word) of their hemistiches, e.g.,¹

مہب مینک یم راک امک رای یایب شاب نم اب یشا بہک اجرہ

which read reversely becomes a Persian verse in the following way :

بیلی ہار کہ ما کاری کنیم بہم ہر جا کہ ناشی ہامن باش

It may be noted that the more artificial a verse, the less clear the sense, and hence the meaning of the last Arabic couplet which contains one of the most artificial and difficult figures of speech is not clear.

The greatest exponent of the subtleties of the 'Ilm al Balāghah that India has produced is 'Abd al-Hakīm of Sialkot who has been mentioned many times. He wrote an extensive and copious super-commentary on the Muṭawwal of Sa'd al-Dīn Taftāzānī, which is in its turn an exhaustive commentary on Sakkākī's Mifīḍh. This super-commentary has been published in Constantinople and enjoys a high repute among men of letters both in India and in Turkey.

Next comes Sayyid 'Alī b. Aḥmad, commonly called Ibn Ma'sūm, already noticed as the author of the Sulāfah and other works. Of the several works left by him, we are concerned here with the Anwār al-Rabī' fī Anwā' al-Badī' (انوارالربيع في انواع البديع). This work consists of a Badī'iyyah (a poem containing examples of all the figures of speech) of the author and his own commentary on it. The author after reading the Badī'iyyah of Ibn Hījjaḥ and its commentary, composed a similar poem in order to surpass his predecessor. He afterwards wrote an extensive commentary from which the present one is abridged. An appendix contains notices of the following nine authors of Badī'iyyahs: Ṣafī al-Dīn al-Ḥillī, (752/1351), Shams al-Dīn Ibn Jābir (780/1378), Abū Ja'far Aḥmad b. Yūsuf al-Ḡharnāwī (779/1377), 'Izz al-Dīn 'Alī b. al-Ḥusayn al-Mawṣilī (789/1387), Ibn Hījjaḥ (837/1433), Ibn al-Muqrī (837/1433), al-Suyūṭī (911-1505), Wajīh al-Dīn 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ibrāhīm al-Zabīdī (d. about 920/1514) and Muḥyī al-Dīn 'Abd al-Qādir b. Muḥammad al-Ṭabarī (1033/1623).

The last, but not least, author worthy of notice is the great Arabic poet of India, Ghulām 'Alī Āzād who has rightly won the distinguished title of the Ḥassān al-Hind. The third chapter of his Subḥat al-Marjān, is devoted exclusively to literary beauties and rhetorical devices. Like Amīr Khusraw, he was a scholar of some originality as far as the art of rhetoric is concerned. He has likewise invented some figures of speech and has creditably introduced into Arabic literature some of the rhetorical beauties of Sanskrit and Hindī.

He states in the beginning of the above-mentioned third chapter of the Subḥat that the ancient Hindūs invented many figures of speech and rhetorical devices, some of which are common to themselves and to the Arabs, whilst others are peculiar to them only, and so he proposes to introduce the latter kind of speech into Arabic literature, hoping that the Arabs will realise the value of Indian rhetoric as they have appreciated the merits of Indian swords. He has adopted twenty-three of the Indian figures of speech, and has given them appropriate names. Thirty seven-figures of speech he has himself invented. In addition to these two classes of rhetorical contrivances, he has also mentioned nine old figures of speech, thus dealing with sixty-nine figures altogether, which he has discussed in three Maqālāt (Discourses).

To indicate the nature of the figures of speech borrowed from Sanskrit, one or two examples may be given here :

(1) Barā'at al-Jawāb (براعة الجواب). This beauty lies in giving one ambiguous word in reply to two different questions. The following example in English may give an idea about it. Suppose there are two questions: Why is there no fish caught? and what is wrong with this triangle? The reply in both cases may be 'Because there is no angle.'

(2) Mukhālaṭat al-Ṣidq bi'l-Kidhb, which means 'mixing truth with falsehood', that is to say, arguing for a false fact by means of a true fact, e.g.,¹

واخف اهل الشرك حتى انه - لتخافك المطب التي لم تحلق

(You have frightened the people of Shirk (i.e., polytheists) so much that even the embryo that has not yet been born fears you) Here the last fact is absolutely false, but it has been mentioned in such a relation with the former statement, which may be true, that the mind of the reader cannot distinguish between true and false.

1. This couplet is by Abū Nuwās.

Another beauty that may be mentioned here is one invented by Amīr Khusraw but named Bū Qalamūn by Āzād. It consists in employing in a sentence or a verse a word common to more than one language, in such a way that the different meanings of the word according to the different languages may be applicable, e.g., in a Qur'ānic verse there is this small sentence (بَا تَيْنَا فَرْدًا)¹ in which the word Fardā means 'alone' or 'individually'. God is speaking of a certain unbeliever. He says: 'He shall come alone to us.' This word Fardā in Persian means 'tomorrow', which often signifies 'the day of resurrection.' This meaning is also applicable here. Another example of the same figure of speech is another Qur'ānic verse which contains this sentence: (لِي الْفَرِيقَيْنِ خَيْرٌ مِّمَّا مَاءٌ وَاحِشٌ نَدْبًا)² Nadyā in Arabic means 'assembly' and in Urdu or Hindi 'river', which is also applicable. Āzād says that God, Omniscient as He is, must have thought of the beauty of this word.

Āzād has recorded a humorous anecdote which may not be out of place to mention here. A certain Hindū, says Āzād, put this question to 'Abd al-Jalīl, an eminent scholar of Aurangzib's time: "You Muslims believe: لَا رَطْبٌ وَلَا يَأْسٌ إِلَّا فِي كِتَابٍ مَبِينٍ (There is nothing wet or dry but is in the book.) Is there any mention of Kānā (the name of their leader) in the Qur'ān?" "O yes," he replied promptly, "God says:

1. The Qur'ān, xix, 80

2 Ibid, xix, 73.

wa Kāna min al-Kāfirin."

The following couplets of Āzād himself are good examples of the figure of speech under consideration :

و غلدة من بنات الهند قد ظهرت في زيتها من اسجاف و استار
فقلت لما سرت في اللاذ مائسة يا حبذا السربل يا جندا السارى

(A damsel, one of the Indian girls, has appeared in her garb—her skirts and veils ; I said when she walked in red silk with an elegant gait, "What a beautiful garment, and how fair is she that walks!") Here the word Sārī in Hindī means a kind of Indian dress which is applicable also here. In this case the meaning of the phrase will be 'What a nice dress' in place of 'What a nice walker.'

Āzād has also composed a Badi'iyyah like those of other scholars. Before giving his Badi'iyyah, he says, by way of a modest apology, that so far only scholars and those men of letters who have constantly been in contact with Arabic-speaking nations have composed such poems. It is a very difficult task for an Indian to enter the arena of rhetorical competition with them. "I, by the grace of God," says he, "have succeeded in composing a Badi'iyyah. Often it happens that a small man may achieve what may surprise great big folk."

In my humble opinion his Badi'iyyah is a work that may rank with those of standard authors. If a critic cannot acknowledge the superiority of his rhetorical poem over those of other writers, I am sure, he will not hesitate to regard him as competent for this intellectual competition with the literary heroes of Arabia and other countries, and this is in no way an ordinary achievement for a pure Indian.

CHAPTER XI

LITERARY COMPOSITION AND ORNATE PROSE

As the production of this branch of literature, like that of poetry, demands, on the part of those who aspire to it, a complete mastery over the language and literature on the one hand, and a fine and delicate taste for literary subtleties on the other, it is, in view of the often mentioned disadvantages under which India has made her contribution to Arabic literature, rather too much to expect her to do her share in this matter to the same extent as she has done in the case of those departments of Arabic literature in which she has been less handicapped. Yet she has acquitted herself fairly well in this purely literary sphere also. This subject may be discussed under the following six heads:

1. Khutbahs (Sermons)	4
2. Literary Selections	2
3. Letters	1
4. Belles-Lettres	3
5. Commentaries on poetical works		...	1

I. KHUTBAHS

In India many Khutbahs have been composed, of which the following deserve mention:

(1) The well-known Sūfī of India, named Shaykh

Nizām al-Dīn, styled Sultān al-Awliyā (725/1324), was an eminent scholar also. One Khutbah of his has been much appreciated throughout India on account of the elegance of the style, coupled with the heart-burning expression of a lover's zeal and enthusiasm for the Divine love, contained therein. It is still recited on the pulpits of many Indian mosques. Its style is elegant and at the same time sublime. A few introductory sentences may be cited here :

الحمد لله الذى قصرت عن روئيته ابصار الناظرين وعجزت عن لعمته
اوهام الواصلين ابتدع بقدرته الخلق ابتداءً و اخترعهم على مشيئة اختراعاً -
وانطق لسان الذاكرين بذكر لاله الا الله و اودع مفاتيح الانوار فى صدور العالمين
لا يعلمها الا الله و روح المشتاقين بروح اشتياق فى مشاهد جمال الله و احرق
دم المحبين بسيف الجلال فى بدء وصال الله و احرق قلب العاشقين بنار العشق
فى ابتغاء الله و خلق الجنة والنار للمؤمنين والكفار ليحجز الذين اساؤا بها
عملوا و يحزى الذين احسنوا بالحسن - ولو كانت الجنة نصيب العارفين بدون
جماله و وصاله فواويله و لو كانت النار نصيب المشتاقين مع جماله و وصاله

(All praise is due to Him, of the vision of Whom the eyes of beholders have fallen short and Whom the imaginations of those who have communion with Him have failed to describe. He has created creatures with His power and brought them out of absolute nothingness into existence by His Will. He has made the tongue of the divine praisers recite lā Ilāha Ill-Allāh and has deposited in the breasts of the learned the keys to lights known to none but God. He has animated the souls of those who are longing for the Divine vision, with the spirit of longing to behold the beauty of God, and has shed the blood of the lovers (of God) with the sword of His majesty in the desert of communion with God, and has burnt the hearts of the Divine lovers with the fire of love in their longing to meet God. He has created Paradise and Hell for the believers and the infidels in order to repay the wicked for what they have done, and to compensate the righteous for their good deeds. If Paradise be the lot of the gnostics, but without the vision of, and communion with Him, woe betide them; and if Hell, accompanied with the beauty of God and with communion with Him, be allotted to those who long (for God), how great will be their longing !)

The sublimity of the ideas expressed therein and the elegance of the style are too obvious to require any comment; the last two sentences are particularly exquisite in their nature.

(2) Shāh Walī Ullāh of Delhi has also composed some Khutbahs, the finest being the one that begins as follows :

الحمد لله الذى خلق الانسان وقد اتى عليه حين من الدهر لم يكن شيئاً
مذكوراً -

The beauty of this Khutbah lies in the fact that the author has ably and ingeniously incorporated some suitable phrases and sentences from the Qur'ānic chapter LXXVI into his own composition. For instance, the first sentence, which has been just quoted has been taken from the first verse of the above-mentioned Sūrah, with this slight alteration that the introductory words وقد اتى عليه حين have been changed into هل اتى على الانسان حين to suit the context. This beauty the author has maintained throughout. This Khutbah is very popular in India.

(3) Muhammad Ismā'il, grandson of Shāh Walī

Ullāh, composed several Khuṭabāt, all of them being well-known in India. This Muḥammad Ismā'il was an eminent scholar and a strict follower of Ahl al-Ḥadīth. He earnestly espoused the cause of this sect in India and left many works in Arabic, Persian and Urdu bearing on this puritanic and non-conformist movement. His Khuṭabāt are elegant and sweet in style, and inspiring and sublime in theme.

(4) Lastly may be mentioned the name of 'Abd al-Hayy, a modern author who composed a number of books in Arabic on various branches of Muslim learning. His book entitled al-Laṭā'if al-Mustaḥsinah bi Jam' Khuṭab Shuhūr al-Sanah (اللطائف المستحسنه بجمع خطب شهور السنة) contains as many Khuṭabāt as there are Fridays in a year. Though the author does not fall within the scope of the present thesis, as he died some time after the Mutiny, yet his Khuṭabāt deserve mention here. Their peculiarity, apart from their charming style and elegant composition, lies in the fact that they are divided according to the number of the months in a year, each division being further subdivided according to the number of Fridays in a month. Thus each Friday has its own Khuṭbah, which, in addition to the general theme of Khuṭabāt, deals with those injunctions and religious exercises which concern that particular month and week in which it is to be recited. As to the style, they may well be compared with such standard ornate prose works as the Aṭwāq al-Dhahab by Zamakhsharī, and Aṭbāq al-Dhahab by Sharaf al-Dīn.

II. LITERARY SELECTIONS : 2 WORKS

(1) Of the Arabic literary selections made in India

one of the most valuable is the Nafḥat al-Yaman fī mā Yazūlu bi Dhikrihī al-Shajan, (نفحة اليمن في ما يزول بذكره الشجن) which was collected by Aḥmad b. Muḥammad al-Yamanī (d. 1256/1840) while he was at Calcutta in the service of the Honourable East India Company which did so much for the advancement of Arabic and other learning in India during its regime. He came of a family which originally belonged to Hamadān, and after some vicissitudes settled in Yaman. His father went to India to join his paternal uncle who had previously settled in Benāres, but before he reached India the uncle died and he, being disappointed at this sad news, and also at the unkind treatment he received from his cousins, went to Lucknow, where the Nawāb Āṣaf al-Dawlah showered royal favours on him. After staying for some time at Lucknow, he went back to the Yaman, and on his way at Ḥudaydah he married the daughter of a Sayyid, the issue of which marriage was our author. His early days were passed at Ḥudaydah where he studied various branches of learning. Subsequently he came to Calcutta and was employed as a teacher of Arabic at the College of Fort William. After some time he resigned his post and went to Ghāzī al-Dīn Haydar of Lucknow who showed him great favour. After the death of the Nawāb, he visited several cities of India, and at last he died at Pūna, in 1256/1840. He wrote a number of prose works, interspersed with verse. Though his birthplace was Yaman, the field of his literary activities was chiefly India.

The merits of these selections have been fully recognised by the contemporaries of the editor as well as by later scholars. They are regarded as useful text-books for the study of Arabic literature (in its special sense) in all the old-fashioned schools, and also in some new institutions. It is divided into five chapters. The first is devoted to short stories and literary anecdotes; the second comprises two literary debates: one between the rose and the narcissus and the other between the physician and the astrologer; the third is a poetical selection containing many poems and panegyrics, among which we find a Qaṣīdah of our great Indian poet Āzād; the fourth contains four Lāmiyyah Qaṣā'id; and the fifth is a collection of proverbs, maxims, etc.

(2) The other selection that may be mentioned here is one made by Muḥammad Husayn Khān of Shāhjahānpūr (d. 1276/1859), under title of Riyāḍ al-Firdaus (رياض الفردوس). It is a large compendium divided in the first place into three sections, Arabic, Persian and Urdu. We are here concerned with the first one, which is again divided into two large chapters, the first dealing with poetry and the second with prose. The second chapter is further split up into five sub-chapters. The first contains letters of eminent scholars, of whom five are Indian; the second is a learned treatise by al-Suyūṭī on various problems of orthography, grammar, rhetoric, etc.; the third comprises selections from standard books on various branches of Islamic learning of which the treatise on Sūfism is by an Indian Sūfī named Shaykh Faḍl Ullāh of Burhānpūr; the fourth contains treatises on sciences such as logic, philosophy, arithmetic, geometry, medicine and anatomy, of which treatises, one on logic is by an Indian scholar 'Abd al-Haqq; and the fifth consists of selections connected with such topics as the rules of debating and study, Taqārīz, (literary appreciations), etc., among which are two Indian products. The vast scope that these sections cover makes them appear almost like an encyclopaedia. The merits of this compendium may be judged from the fact that scholars such as Sa'd Ullāh Murādābādī, Turāb 'Alī and Nawāb Siddīq Ḥasan Khān have spoken of it in high terms.

It is true that the making of selections is no work of originality: selections are after all selections, that is to say, the work of others and not of the compiler himself. Yet it enables one to judge the ability and taste of the compiler, just as al-Tibrīzī has said of Abū Tammām, the famous compiler of the best-known Arabic anthology, Ḥamāsah, that he has manifested greater ability and finer taste as a maker of these selections than as a poet.

III. LETTERS AND COMPOSITION CONCERNING CORRESPONDENCE: ONE WORK

The compiler of the Nafḥat al-Yaman composed also a book entitled 'Ajab al-'Ujāb fī mā Yufid al-Kuttāb (عجب العجاب في ما يفيد الكتاب) which is an introduction to the art of letter-writing, being a collection of letters on various subjects. In presenting this work to the public the author has spared no pains to render it consonant with its title. He hopes that by his employers it will be considered as a proof of his zeal for the advancement of the Arabic language. This book is divided into three parts: the first deals with the correspondence of men of letters; the second with that of Sultāns, Wazīrs and Qādīs; and the last with that of merchants. The appendix, which is in itself a fourth part, is a copious collection of family letters and notes on the occasions of every day—all having that loose texture of composition which is so natural in common life. The letters contained in the first part are those that passed between the author and his friends. They are in ornate and flowery prose, there being no subject-matter beyond the acknowledgment of a letter or the expression of feelings of love and affection to the addressee. These letters are written in so artificial and pedantic a style that they seem to have been designed for the display of the writer's ability and penmanship rather than for any other purpose. One of these letters is written to Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz of Delhi. It is written in a beautiful and elegant style, but the reply is in a style more beautiful still. The original letter also contains a Mimīyyah panegyric in praise of the addressee, Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz, who in reply composed a Nūniyyah Qaṣīdah which, being in praise of the Prophet, deals with a nobler theme and is of sweeter melody. In the prose portion of his letter, the Shāh has given a vivid and pathetic description of the illness from which he was suffering at the time of replying to the letter. He also records his appreciation of Aḥmad Yamānī's poem (written in his praise), and the only defect he detects in it is that it was composed in praise of a person (meaning himself) who was not worthy of its contents at all. This work is interesting, and the first of its kind in India.

IV. BELLES LETTKES AND ARTIFICIAL COMPOSITION : 3 WORKS

The tendency of Indian mind towards artificiality, both in prose and poetry, has already been discussed at some length in connection with the two Qur'anic commentaries, the Sawāṭi' al-Ilhām and the Jubb Shaghah, in which the authors have skilfully maintained throughout the extremely artificial style of avoiding dotted and undotted letters, respectively. Apart from these two books the following three works may be noticed under the present head:

(1) Mawārid al-Kīlam wa Silk Durar al-Ḥikam (موارد الکلام و سلك درر الحکم) by the celebrated Shaykh Abu'l-Fayḍ Fayḍī, the author of the Sawāṭi'. From the standpoint of the subject-matter this book was noticed among the works on Sūfism and ethics, but in the consideration of the style maintained throughout it falls also under the present category. In this work the author, as in the case of the Sawāṭi', has avoided dotted letters and made use of undotted letters only. This work is divided into fifty sections called Mawrids, which cover a long range of ethical excellences. The author has taken his subject-matter from various sources and has reproduced them in his own way, maintaining above-mentioned figure of speech, called al-Ṣan'at al-Muhmalah. The very title of the book is a chronogram indicating the date of its composition as 985 A.H. The author by writing this book has undoubtedly shown a wonderful command over the Arabic language and literature. As far as is known to the writer of the present dissertation, only in India have such attempts been made to compose a complete book illustrating this figure of speech. Muḥammad Ṣiddīq of Lahore (d. 1192/1778) is said to have written a biography of the Prophet maintaining throughout the Ṣan'at al-Ihmāl, and the author of the Ḥadā'iq al-Ḥanafīyyah remarks that it is a greater credit to its author than the Sawāṭi' is to Fayḍī.¹ This work unfortunately does not seem to exist in any of those libraries the catalogues of which have been published. There exists, however, another work of the same peculiarity in the Rāmpūr State Library. It is a commentary on the Sūrah Yūsuf by Ṣāhibzādah 'Alī 'Abbās Khān, who flourished in the time of Nawāb Kalb 'Alī Khān of Rāmpur. Another composition with the same literary characteristic, entitled Durūd-i-Ghiyā-thiyyah, has already been noticed in connection with works on Ṣufism and ethics.

To show the nature and scope of the work under consideration, a few quotations may be cited: The first Mawrid is Mawrid al-Islām, which runs as follows:

مِرَاسِمَهُ وَ اعْطُوا مَالًا مَأْمُورًا لِلْمُعْلُوكِ وَ هُوَ الْإِسْلَامُ -

(Say Lā Ilāha Illa-Allāh, say your prayers, go round the Ḥaram in its proper time, complete its ritual rites with the Iḥrām and give alms to the needy as ordered. And this is Islām.) How skilfully he has mentioned the five principles without using any single dotted letter. Then he goes on to say something regarding each principle.

The next Mawrid is of the Qur'ān which runs:

والحكم -

٣- ورد - علوم كلام الله عدد كلمه -

٣- ورد - اداؤه كما سمعوه -

٥- رسول الله صلعم علم اداء كلام الله رحمائه و الرحماء علموا وهظاً
كسالم و عمر و عطاء و مسلم و طلوس و الاسود - و سعد و عاصم
و ما عداهم -

٦- ورد - صدور السور اسماء لها كالحمد - طه و العصر و ما سواها -

٥- اسماء السور مما عوال المسموع كهود الرعد - اسراء -

٨- ورد - لمالك ملك و للصراط سراط ، ورد طه مكسور الطاء و الهاء
رواه ولد مسعود -

Then come Mawrids of 'Ilm al-Kalām, of Adam, of Muḥammad, of the Companions of the Prophet, of his descendants, of saints, of kings, and then of moral virtues, each being treated in a separate Mawrid.

In the conclusion of his book the author has employed the reverse figure of speech, called Ṣan'at al-Manqūṭah, which lies in avoiding undotted letters. This concluding portion is only two pages long, but, being full of bombastic and uncommon words, is very difficult to understand.

(2) Al-Maqāmāt al-Hindīyyah (المقامات الهندية), composed by Sayyid Abū Bakr b. Muḥsin al-'Alawī, on the lines of the previous works of similar nature. Nothing is known about the author except that he was an Arab and lived for a considerable time in India. The chronogram at the end indicates that the work was completed in 1128/1715.¹

1. The author of the Mu'jam al-Maṭbū'āt (معجم المطبوعات) says that the author died about 523 (p. 322), which is obviously a misprint for some other figure.

The reason for the composition of the book is mentioned in the brief preface, where we are told that one day the author went out for an excursion in a mixed company of educated and uneducated persons, taking with him the Maqāmāt of Ḥarīrī and Badī'. When he sat down to recite one of them, those who were not well versed in the Arabic language and literature naturally did not like the reading, whereupon some of those present suggested to the author that he should write a book in imitation of these works but in an easy and simple style such as might be comprehended without reference to lexicons. The author having realised the value of such a work, at once took up this literary enterprise and soon finished it. It consists of fifty Maqāmāt each named after some Indian town, e.g., Sūratiyyah, Aḥmadnagariyyah, Lāhūriyyah, etc. The narrator is Abu'l-Nāṣir b. Fattāḥ who narrates the adventures and feats of Abu'l-Zafar al-Hindī—these two characters play the same part as played by 'Isā b. Hishām and Abū Zayd, respectively in the Maqāmāt al-Ḥarīrī. The nature of the theme is almost the same as those of Ḥarīrī and Badī'. An instance or two may be given here.

The purport of the Maqāmāh al-Sūratiyyah is as follows:—The narrator, Abu'l-Nāṣir says that being attracted by a beautiful description of India he went to that country and landed at Sūrat, where he enjoyed his visit very much. One day, while walking in the city, he met a man who took him to the court of a minister and introduced him as a poet and scholar, praising him so eloquently and elegantly that the minister was much pleased with the newcomer and ordered a rich reward and a robe of honour to be given to him. All these things were received by the stranger and then they both left the minister's house. Out of this reward and gift, the stranger gave our friend very little, saying that he should wait till he (the stranger) returned from the adjacent house. into which he at once disappeared. Our friend waited and waited in vain, but the man did not come back again. The visitor enquired about the stranger and to his surprise he was told that he was no other than Abu'l-Zafar al-Hindī.

In the Maqāmah of Aḥmadnagar, Abu'l-Nāṣir relates that one day, as he was passing through a certain street, he came across a well where a beautiful woman was drawing water. Feeling thirsty, he asked for water. After quenching his thirst while he was having a talk with the woman, there appeared a man who wanted to take her away with him. She refused to go, and cried for help. Abu'l-Nāṣir intervened between them. The stranger claimed that she was his wife and had run away from him—a statement which at first the woman denied but afterwards admitted. She said, "Well, I am ready to follow you, but you must give me something to eat," to which the claimant replied that he was very poor and had no money with him. "Then why do you not borrow some money from a gentleman?" rejoined the wife. But the suggestion was rejected by the cunning husband, and our narrator was so much touched by their quarrel that he felt constrained to give them something from his own pocket. Abu'l-Nāṣir overheard them saying as they went away, "What a nice plan we devised!" and, carefully observing the man, discovered that he was Abu'l-Zafar.

The style of the book is neither bombastic nor elaborate but simple and easy. This work was not known to Mr. Chenery, the translator of the Maqāmāt al-Ḥaririyyah, though he gave in his introduction a list of other similar works written before or after these assemblies. No European library seems to contain any manuscript of it. It has been lithographed more than once in India and India Office Library possesses a copy.

(3) Al-Manāqib al-Ḥaydariyyah (المناقب الحيدريه), composed by Aḥmad b. Muḥammad Yamanī, already noticed. This work was, as indicated by its title, dedicated to Ghāzī al-Dīn Ḥaydar, king of Oudh, at whose court the author spent some time, enjoying the generous hospitality of his royal host and patron. When the author went back to Calcutta, he wrote the present work in recognition of the kindness he had received. This book is divided into eight chapters :

- | | |
|---------|---|
| Chapter | I. An account of the king's clemency and forbearance. |
| „ | II. An account of his generosity. |
| „ | III. An account of his accession to the throne, and of his bravery. |
| „ | IV. An account of his religious practices and eloquence. |
| “ | V. An account of his minister. |
| „ | VI. Accounts of his palaces. |
| | VII. Accounts of his gardens. |
| „ | VIII. An account of his miracles. |

In addition to the above-mentioned matters, the book is full of entertaining digressions, both literary and historical. It has been composed from beginning to end on the principle of الشى بالشى يذكر (that is to say, one topic leads to another). For instance, while speaking of the king's generosity, he says the king is more generous than the Barmakid princes, and then gives a short but interesting account of this house. Or, when speaking of his eloquence, he mentions some noted essayists and elegant writers and gives accounts of them. In this connection he refers to a letter addressed to Ṣālāḥ al-Dīn by his minister, and then he gives a sketch of the Ayyūbid dynasty. Then he mentions several kings and rulers who were well-versed in the art of composition and literature. While describing the royal palaces at Lucknow, he makes mention of some of the celebrated and wonderful buildings and cities of the world.

While digressing on a cat, he gives an interesting story, which of course is not a new one, of a Bedouin who had never seen a cat until he happened to get hold of one. While he was taking it away in his arms, he met another Bedouin who said, "What will you do with this Sinnawr (cat)?" He had scarcely gone a few steps further when another man asked him what he would do with the Qitt. To be brief, in a short time the Bedouin met seven men who put to him the same question, but each used a different word for the cat. The Bedouin thought that the little animal must be very precious, and so he took it to the market for sale. People asked him the price, to which he replied "One hundred Dirhams." Then they laughed and said that it was not worth even one Dirham. The Bedouin, being disillusioned, threw away the cat, saying لعنة الله ما اكثر اسمائه و ما اقل ثمنه (God's curse ; how many names, and how small a price !)

While describing the royal gardens, the author has not merely mentioned all the fruits and flowers, but has also given appropriate Arabic couplets in praise of them. While describing the elephants and horses of the king, he has given a curious account of an elephant. He says that one of the royal elephants had been so trained that during the first ten days of Muḥarram he used to weep and lament the death of the Prophet's grandson like a man. Then the author cites a small Arabic poem which he puts in the mouth of the dumb animal. This poem is so skilfully worded that it really resembles the shriek of an elephant. This poem runs as follows :

واحسينا واحسينا واحسين
ان كريبى هاج فيما قد جرى فى كربلا للحسين السيد المولى امام الاتقياء
من طغاه خالفوا احكام خير الانبياء واداقوا اهل بيت المصطفى مر العناء آه من جور العدى وا حسين
شتتوا شمل الهدى وا حسين وا حسين

Thus every chapter of the book is full of interesting digressions, included on the plea of being slightly connected with the main theme, so making the book both entertaining and profitable.

V. COMMENTARIES ON STANDARD LITERARY WORKS

Under this head there may be mentioned at least one work which is of some importance. It is a copious commentary entitled Muṣaddiq al-Faḍl (مصدق الفضل) on the well-known Qaṣidah Bānat Su'ād, composed by Shihāb al-Dīn Dawlatābādī, whose works on Arabic grammar have already been noticed.

On this Qaṣīdah several scholars, such as Muwaffaq al-Dīn ‘Abd al-Latīf (d. 629/1231), Ibn Hishām (d. 761/1359), Ibrāhīm al-Lakhmī (790/1385) and Suyūṭī (911/1505) wrote commentaries – and super-commentaries, and the present commentary is an attempt by an Indian.

The commentator begins with a short account of the poet and his poetical talents. Then he takes up the poem, couplet by couplet, and comments upon it in a very elaborate and detailed manner under the following eight heads :

- | | |
|---------------------|-------------------------------|
| I. Lughat , | V. Bayān , |
| II. Saraf , | VI. Badī‘ , |
| III. Ṣaḥw , | VII. ‘Arūḍ , |
| IV. Ma‘ānī , | VIII. Hāṣil (purport). |

While commenting on the first couplet, he has added one more head, viz., Qawāfī, and this explanation, once given here, applies equally to all the remaining couplets and needs no repetition or addition.

To maintain this profoundly elaborate and detailed way of commenting throughout the poem was no easy task. Yet we find that our author has done it, and done it successfully.

VI. LEGENDARY WORK : ONE

Under this head reference may be made to the Qissa Shahrūtī (قصه شهرتی) which is a fabulous account of the first settlement of the Muslims in Mālābār, under the king Shahrūtī of Cranganore, a contemporary of the Prophet, who was converted to Islām by the miracle of the splitting of the moon. The name of the author is not known, but this much is almost certain, that he was an Indian, because other works written about Mālābār, such as Tuḥfat al-Mujāhidīn and al-Faṭḥ al-Mubīn li al-Sāmīri, noticed already, were composed by natives of that country. Moreover, the subject-matter is such that only a resident of Mālābār is likely to have dealt with it. The India Office Library contains a unique manuscript of it.¹

The legend is briefly as follows :

When the verse *wa Andhīr 'Ashirataka al-Aqrabīn*² (Warn thy nearest relations) was revealed to the Prophet, he gathered his relatives and friends together and invited them to accept Islām, whereupon a few persons embraced the new religion, but the others turned their backs upon him and determined to prevent him from preaching his new doctrines. These unbelievers at last went to certain Arab king of Madīnah, named Ḥabīb b. Mālīk, and besought his help against the heresy of the new prophet. Thereupon the king, with an army of four thousand horsemen, left for Makkah, and encamped in the vicinity of the town. The king told the complainants that he thought it better first to ask Muḥammad to perform an impossible miracle. So Muḥammad was sent for, but as he was about to leave his house, the angel Gabriel came to him and informed him of the exact state of affairs. Then, having thus a complete knowledge of what was going to happen, he went to the king who, in spite of his dignity and splendour, could not refrain from standing up, to show his respects to the Prophet when he entered his court.

1. See Loth's Catalogue, 1044, IV.

2. The Qur'ān, XXVI, 214.

After some preliminary conversation, the king asked him to perform the following miracle: "To-day," he said, "the fifth of the lunar month, the full moon must rise from behind the mountain of Abū Qays, speak eloquently of your being a prophet, then descend from the sky, enter your right sleeve and go out by your left, then to be divided into two halves, one half going to the East and the other to the West, and lastly join together again in the centre of the sky." When the miracle was performed by the Prophet exactly as requested, the king with his army embraced Islām and went back to his kingdom.

This miracle was, on this very night, observed by a king of India named Shakrūtī, who collected his soothsayers and astronomers and gave them forty days in which to explain this phenomenon. When this period was over and no one could throw any light upon the matter, the king beheld the Prophet in a dream, and he explained everything to the entire satisfaction of the king. This dream caused the Indian king to become a sincere lover of the Prophet. Meanwhile, some Jews and Christians of Makkah and some Muslim travellers who were going on pilgrimage to Mount Adam, reached the capital of the king Shakrūtī. All of them bore testimony to the splitting of the moon. When the Muslim pilgrims returned from Ceylon to their own country, the king secretly went with them to Makkah, met the Prophet, and embraced Islām. The Prophet named him Sultān Tāj al-Dīn al-Hindī. When the news of his arrival and conversion to Islām reached the king Ḥabīb b. Mālīk, he went to visit the Indian convert and the two kings formed a strong friendship.

234 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

Afterwards they decided to go to India, but when the royal party reached the port, the Indian king fell seriously ill, but while he was dying, he urged his companions not to give up the idea of going on to India. He wrote them some letters of introduction and recommendation to his ministers and courtiers ; and after his death the party proceeded to India, where they were cordially received and granted every facility.

CHAPTER XII

ARABIC POETRY IN INDIA

Many Indians have written Arabic verse, but since Arabic poetry, even in Arabic speaking countries, had lost its glory and sublimity by the time that Arabic studies commenced in India, the Arabic poets of this country cannot be expected to display poetical genius of a high order. The best among them are merely elegant artists playing beautifully with words, and achieving nothing more.

Arabic poetry, like Persian, has generally thrived under the patronage of rulers and princes. The Indian Muslim kings were Persian-speaking people, and were naturally more interested in Persian poetry. Hence Arabic poetry did not receive any patronage and impetus from the courts of the ruling houses in Northern India, and though the courts of Gujarāt and the Deccan attracted many poets and scholars from Arabia, yet in the first place their number was small as compared with that of the poets and scholars who came from Persia and, in the second place, their literary activities were limited and did not enjoy any particular amount of patronage. It is to be regretted that owing to the lack of interest in such Arabic poetry as was produced in Southern India, only a few names of such poets have come down to us. Historians simply say that these courts contained several Arabian poets and scholars, but do not give their names or any account of them.

The 'Aydarūs family of Aḥmadābād, being in constant touch with South Arabia, attracted several scholars and poets from Arabia during the early days of their settlement in Aḥmadābād. The Nūr al-Sāfir contains short accounts of such poets, but their sojourn in India was temporary only. Mālābār, in which Arabic for some time had the same supremacy as Persian in Northern India, must have produced some poets; but no mention is to be found except of Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-'Azīz, the brother of Zayn al-Dīn, author of the Tuḥfat al-Mujāhidīn, who composed a Mathnawī in Arabic, entitled 'al-Faṭḥ al-Mubīn li al-Sāmīrī Alladhī Yuḥibb al-Muslimīn. This work will be reviewed later on.

There were other Arabic poets too who settled in India, e g, Ibn Ma'sūm, his father Nizām, Ḥasan b. Shādqam, the author of the Zahr al-Riyāḍ, mentioned above, and his sons all of them were attached to one or the other court in the Deccan or Gujarāt. The Sulāfat al-Aṣr, already noticed, contains short biographical accounts of them as well as some extracts from their poetry. Now we mention, in chronological order, some of the important Arabic poets, whether Indians or foreigners but domiciled in India.

The earliest of them is Mas'ūd b. Sa'd b. Salmān, better known as a Persian than an Arabic poet. His ancestors were residents of Hamadān, but his father was for sixty years in the service of the kings of Ghazna, and had acquired possession of many farms and estates in Lahore and other parts of India. Mas'ūd was born and brought up at Lahore.¹ Besides Persian, he was well versed in Arabic and Hindi, and left a Dīwān in each of these languages.² But it is to be regretted that his Arabic and Hindi Dīwāns appear to have been lost. Waṭwāt has cited a number of Mas'ūd's Arabic verses in his Ḥadā'iq al-Sihr.

Persian and Indian poets are very fond of using the figure of speech called Tawriyah or Ihām which consists in the employment of two or more ambiguous terms, which at first sight appear to be used in one sense, though really they must be taken in quite a different meaning.

The following Qiṭ'ah of Mas'ūd, cited by Waṭwāt contains this figure of speech :³

وليل كان الشمس صلت معها	و ليس لها نجو المشارق مرجع
نظرت اليه و الظلام كانه	على السفيران من الجو وقع
فقلت لقلبي طال ليلي و ليس لي	من الهم منجاء و في الصبر مفزع
ارى ذلب السرحان في الجو طالعا	فهل ممكن ان الغراله تطعم

(I have seen many a night when the sun seemed to have lost its way and to be unable to return to the East and the darkness was just as if the crows were falling down from the sky upon the eye.

(I said to my heart, "The night has been long and there is no escape for me from my grief and patience is my only recourse. I see that the false dawn is visible on the horizon. Is it then possible for the sun to rise?")

1 For a critical and detailed account, see Professor Browne's translation of Mirzā Muhammad b. 'Abd-al-Wahhāb Qazwini's monograph on this poet, J.R.A.S. (for 1905, pp. 693-740).

2. Khusraw, Preface to his Dīwān Ghurraṭ al-Kamāl.

3. Subhah, p. 27.

Here the beauty lies in the employment of two ambiguous words, ذنب السرحان which means 'false dawn' and 'the wolf's tail', and عزاله which means both 'the sun' and 'the deer.' The poet says that it is impossible for the sun (for which he uses the word غزاله meaning also 'deer') to appear when the false dawn for which he employs the term ذنب السرحان signifying also 'the wolf's tail') is still visible.

Next comes the greatest Persian poet that India has ever produced, Amīr Khusraw. His reputation depends entirely upon his Persian poems, yet he used to versify in Arabic also. Arabic verses occur here and there in his I'jāz-i-Khusrawī noticed in the last chapter but one. We also find some Arabic odes in his Diwāns. His Khazā'in al-Futūḥ also contains scattered verses in Arabic. We have already noticed that he was fond of rhetorical devices and that he himself invented several. He composed one poem in which the first hemistich of each couplet is in Persian and second in Arabic. In the preface of his Diwān entitled Ghurraṭ al-Kamāl, he admits that he is not a good Arabic poet, but at the same time mentions Mawlānā Shihāb al Dīn as a great Indian Arabic poet, whose poetry, he declares, surpassed that of Farazdaq and Jarīr. Of this Shihāb al Dīn, of whom Amīr Khusraw formed so high an opinion, very little is known. Shiblī has made mention of him in his Shi'r al-'Ajam as the teacher of Amīr Khusraw.¹

The following couplets which have been taken from a Qaṣidah composed by Amīr Khusraw in praise of Sultān 'Alā'u'd-Dīn (ruled A.D. 1295-1315) and which begin with the Makhlaṣ, i.e., the line connecting the erotic, introductory lines to the main theme of the panegyric, may serve as a specimen of his Arabic poetry :

بعد التشبيب

مدح المليك المستعان الاعظم	١- في مهجتي سكنت محبتها كما
ملكاً تولد من سلالة آدم	٢- اعنى علاء الدين سلطان الورى
يم السدى بل كفه عين الهم	٣- عين الحيا بل عينه عين الحيا
لغب العراب على رميم الحاتم	٤- من جوده الفياض قد يحكى اذا
الا و يستقى من كوؤس جياجم	٥- ساكن يعطش سيفه بقرابه
بالشعر ليس كمثلها فى العالم	٦- رشح لمد حتك العليه خسروا
فانا اخصك بالبقاء الدائم	٧- كن باخلود على الا رائك قاعداً

(Translation)

1. Her love has housed in my soul, just as the praise of the greatest and most helpful king has done.
2. I mean 'Alā'u'd-Dīn, the lord of the universe, who was born of the progeny of Adam as a king.
3. He is a fountain of modesty, nay, his eye is embodiment of modesty. He is an ocean of generosity, nay, his hand is identical with the ocean.
4. Stories are related of his bounteous liberality, when the crow sips water on the rotten bones of Hātim.
5. His sword is never thirsty in its sheath but is, on the other hand, watered from the cups of skulls.
6. Patronise Khusraw for his lofty panegyric in praise of you, as there is no match to him as poet in the world.

7. Continue perpetually sitting on the throne, as I attribute perpetual existence to you exclusively.

Shaykh Naṣīr al-Dīn styled Chirāgh-i-Dihlawī, the disciple of the famous Indian saint Niẓām al-Dīn Awliyā' was an eminent Arabic scholar, and used to versify in that language. The following couplet of his in praise of his teacher, Shams al-Dīn Yaḥyā of Oudh, is much appreciated in India :¹

سألب العلم من احياءك حقاً فقال العلم شمس الدين يحيى

(I asked Knowledge, "Who has revived thee?" Knowledge replied : "Shams al-Dīn Yaḥyā.")

There is a pun upon the word Yaḥyā which, if read Yuḥyī, means 'rivives', a translation which is also applicable here.

Qāḍī 'Abd al-Muqtadir, the pupil of the same Chirāgh-i-Dihlawī and the teacher of Shihāb al-Dīn Dawlatābādī, was a distinguished scholar and a good Arabic poet. His Qaṣīdat-al-Lāmiyyah, composed in imitation of the Lāmiyyat al-'Ajam, is admired for the elegance of its style, the beauty of the introductory lines, the appropriateness of the Makhlāṣ and the fertility of its imagination. The first couplet of this Qaṣīdah is :

يا مائن الطعن في السحار والصلل ملهم علمي دار ملعي واهك ثم سلى
(O thou who drivest the camel-litters morning and evening, greet the camping-ground of Salmā and weep and then ask).

It has already been stated that Indian poets are very fond of using figures of speech. This Qaṣīdah is full of them. The very first couplet, just cited, contains the following four figures :

1. Tajnis-i-Zā'id between سلمى and سلمى ; and between سلمى and سلمى .
2. Murā'āt al-Nazīr throughout.
3. Ṣan'at al-Ishṭiqāq between سلمى and سلمى .
4. Ṣan'at-i-Taḍādd between Ashūr (mornings) and Uṣul (evenings).

The poet, in the manner of a true Arab poet, first asks the camel-driver to greet the camping-ground of his beloved and weep over it, and then to enquire about the beautiful damsel and the kings who have passed away. Then he turns to a love-theme and speaks of the beauties and charms of his own beloved who is inaccessible, being guarded by brave swordsmen and lancers. But somehow or other he secures access to her and she is surprised to see him and asks him how he managed to avoid the guards. He replies that he is not an ordinary man but a king who always chases tigers and lions. Thereupon his beloved yields and says that she is at his mercy and is unable to resist such a warrior. But the poet rejects her offer and replies that he belongs to that class of people who are pious and chaste. Then after praising the Muslim community, he turns towards the Prophet.

His similes are often very apt. One or two couplets from this very Qaṣīdah may be cited here :

بغيلة لوصول المستهام بها والجود في الخود مثل البخل في الرجل

242 CONTRIBUTION OF INDIA TO ARABIC LITERATURE

“My beloved is miserly about allowing her lover to enjoy communion with her.”

The poet appreciates this attitude on her part and adds :

“Generosity in a beautiful woman is as undesirable as miserliness in a man.”

خيالها عند من بهوى زيارتها احلى من الا من عند الخائف الرجل

(The vision of the beloved in the mind of him who longs to visit her, is even sweeter than safety to one who is in fear and dread.)

Aḥmad of Thānesar, who flourished about the end of the eighth and the beginning of the ninth century of the Hijra, was an eminent scholar and a good poet. Timūr, having heard of his erudition, wanted him to accompany him when he left India, but Aḥmad was unwilling to leave his native country.¹ His Qaṣīdat al-Dāliyyah in praise of the Prophet has been much admired. He connects the customary introductory love-theme with the main purpose of his poem by saying:

“Cease to talk of Laylā and her maidens and turn to the Prophet”—etc.

Shāh Aḥmad Shar‘ī (d. 928/1521) of Chandiri (in Mālwah) used also to compose verses in Arabic.² Two couplets composed in reply to those of Zamakhsharī in his satire on the Ash‘arites, are worthy of notice :

عجياً لقوم الظالمين تلقبوا بالعدل يا فيهم لعمرى معرفه
قد جاء هم من حيث لا يدرونه تعطيل داتا لله مع نفى الصفه

1. Ṣubḥah, 38.

2. Raḥmān ‘Alī, Tadhkirah, 84.

(I marvel at the tyrannical—unreasonable—folk who call themselves men of 'justice', though they have no knowledge of it at all. To them 'justice'—since they do not understand it at all—means God's being deprived of His very essence and the annihilation of His attributes.)

Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-'Azīz Kālikūtī of Mālābār, who flourished during the latter half of the tenth century of the Hijra, was also a poet. Little is known of him except that he belonged to a learned family of Ma'bar. His brother, Zayn al-Dīn, was the author of the Tuḥfat al-Mujāhidīn, already noticed; his father, 'Abd al-'Azīz, was a Qāḍī. 'Alī Muttaqī is reported by 'Abd al-Ḥaqq Ḥaqqī in his *Akhbār al-Akhyār*¹ to have met him and expressed a high opinion of him. His grandfather was also a scholar who composed a versified treatise on Sūfīism, entitled Hidāyat al-Adhkiyā, already noticed. Our present poet versified the account of the struggles of Zamorin of Calicut with the Portuguese under Vasco de Gama, in a fairly long poem consisting of five hundred and three Rajaz verses, under the title of al-Faṭḥ al-Mubīn li'l-Sāmīrī Alladhī Yuḥibb al-Muslimīn. The subject-matter of this poem and of the Tuḥfat al-Mujāhidīn is the same, but the one is in verse and the other in prose. Both the brothers were contemporary with the events related. The India Office Library contains a unique manuscript of this poetical work.² In consideration of the subject-matter, this work may not be of much value, but it is not without some poetical merit. The narrative from beginning to end is simple and elegant. A few couplets may be quoted here to show the nature of the verses. After praise of God and the usual prayers for the Prophet, the poet continues :

فان هذى قصة عجيبة	فى شرح حرب شأنها غريبة
واقعة فى خطبة المليبار	و مثلها لم يجر فى تلك الديار
بين المحب المسلمين السامرى	و بين خصمه الفرجى الكافر
نظمت بعضها و مالک الملوك	ليسمع القصه سائر الملوك
لعلهم اذ سمعوا يفتكروا و	فى الحرب او لعلهم يعتبرون
لعلها تسير فى الا فاق	لا سيما فى الشام والعراق
وليعلموا الهمة للسلطان	السامرى المشهور فى البلدان
صاحب كاليكوت المشهور	لا زوال من فضل الغنى المعموره
وهو محب ديننا الا سلام	والمسلمين بين ذا الانام
ناصر ديننا و مجرى شرعنا	حتى يحطبه على سلطاننا

(This is a wonderful story, giving an account of a strange war occurring in the land of Mālābār—and the like of it never took place in that country—between the lover of the Muslims, the Zamorin, and his enemy, the infidel Farangīs. I have versified some part of it, by God, so that all kings may hear the story; so that they may, when they hear it, ponder over the war or may take a lesson, so that the story may go forth in all directions, especially to Syria and Mesopotamia, so that they may know of the courage of the king Zamorin, who is well-known in all places, the ruler of the celebrated Kālīkūt—may it ever remain prosperous by the grace of God. He loves our religion Islām and the Muslims among mortals. He protects our religion and puts our law into force, so much so that the Khuṭbah is read in the name of our Sulṭān.)

Sayyid 'Alī Khān ibn Ma'sūm (1117/1705), who has been referred to several times in the foregoing pages, was a good poet. His poem al-Badī'yyah, giving examples of all possible rhetorical contrivances, is recognised to be a valuable contribution to Arabic literature on rhetoric. The author also wrote a commentary on his own work. The Sulāfah contains some poems of his.

Sayyid ‘Abd al-Jalīl Bilgrāmī (1128/1715), who flourished in the time of Awrangzīb and six of his successors, was a distinguished scholar and composed verses in four languages : Arabic, Persian, Turkish and Hindī. Ibn Ma‘šūm, the author of the Sulāfah, is reported to have said that he never saw in India a scholar so accomplished as he was.¹ Ghulām ‘Alī Āzād, the greatest Arabic poet of India, speaks highly of his poetry.² He was an expert in versifying chronograms. One of his ingenious chronograms is that which he composed on the conquest of the Fort Sitārah by Awrangzīb.

رب السموات في تأييد اسلام	١- لما توجه سلطان الانام الى
لورد يا قادراً فتاح اكمام	٢- افر ابهامه في اصل خنصره
حصنا لمن عبدوا احجار اصنام	٣- فصار حين افتتاح الاسم مفتتحا
من فوى ابهامه -ن غير ابهام	٤- نظرت في الفات وهي اربعة
رقما على سننه من مد ابهام	٥- وجدت هن لعام الفتح حينئذ
للناظرين فيا المعجز السامي	٦- لله تلك يد بيضاء قد بزغت
عبدالجليل بتأييدات الهام	٧- هذا البديع من التاريخ انشائه

1. When the king of the world turned his face towards the Lord of the Heavens for the help of Islām.

finger to count the recitation of the formula يا قادرًا فتاح اكمام : (O Almighty God Who removes the calyxes of flowers).

3. As soon as he commenced the recitation of the Divine name, he conquered a fort which belonged to the worshippers of idols.
4. I looked in the four Alifs standing above his thumb.
5. I found them at that time to be a figure on the word Sanah (سنة) which is formed by the thumb lying down, to indicate the year of the conquest.
6. How excellent this bright hand which has been miraculously held up for the spectators!
7. This is a very curious chronogram which 'Abdal Jalil has composed with Divine inspiration.

This victory was gained by 'Ālamgīr in the year 1111/1699. For Wird counting is essential and the first number is counted by placing the top of one's thumb at the base of the little finger of the same hand. Now what the poet means to say is this that as soon as the king sat down turning his face towards God and counted the first recitation of the formula by placing his thumb at the base of his little finger, the fort was conquered, and this very position of his thumb and fingers indicated the year of the conquest, the four fingers standing for the four figures 1111 and the thumb lying down, for the small dash generally written in place of the word Sanah (year).

He was a poet of fertile imagination, and his poetry is fanciful throughout. One or two examples may be given here :

حبیبی لوس حاجبه کنون و صا دبد ابن مقله شکل عینه
لعمری انه لیس جلی علی ان الرماة حق عینه

(The eyebrow of my beloved is like the letter Nūn (ن) and the form of his eye is like the letter Ṣād (ص) written by Ibn Muqlah, the great calligrapher. The harmonious combination of the eyebrow and the eye, —that is of ن and ص—is a Naṣṣ, i.e., positive proof of the fact that shooting glances is the right of his eye.)

The word مقله, which means the eyeball, is associated with the other words. This is the reason why the poet has chosen the name of Ibn Muqlah for this purpose.

حبیبی ثغره کالسن شکلا و کالمیم المدور شکل فیه
هما سم و یا عجبا حیاتی اذا ما ذقته لاشک فیه

(The teeth of my beloved are like the letter Sin (س) and his mouth like the rounded Mīm (م). The combination of these two is سم—poison—, but it is strange that the more I taste it—i.e., kiss his mouth and teeth—the more life do I gain.)

Also note the pun that the same word فيه in the first hemistich means 'mouth' and in the second means 'in it.')

In short, he was a clever poet and had a complete mastery over every figure of speech. Waṭwāt says that a certain couplet by Badī' al-Zamān is so beautiful that no one could ever compose a verse to match it, but 'Abd al-Jalīl succeeded in producing a couplet of the same type. The verse by al-Badī' runs:

هو لیدر الا انه البحر زاخراً سوی انه الضرغام لكنه الوبل

(He is the full moon but at the same time the ocean in swell. He is a lion but at the same time a shower of rain.)

'Abd al-Jalīl's couplet runs:

هو القطب الا انه البدر طالما سوى انه المريح لكنه السعد

(He is the pole-star but at the same time the full moon arising. He is Mars but at the same time auspicious).

Sayyid Muḥammad (1158/1745), the son of Sayyid 'Abd al-Jalīl, was also a fine poet and was fond of playing with words and phrases.

Bilgrāmī has produced many scholars and poets besides 'Abd al-Jalīl, e g , Sayyid Ṭufayl Muḥammad (d. 1151/1738), Sayyid Muḥammad Yūsuf (d. 1172/1758) and Sayyid Ghulām 'Alī Āzād (1200/1785) of whom I shall speak later on.

In Delhi the family of Shāh Walī Ullāh was noted for its Islamic learning and also for Arabic poetry. He himself, his father 'Abd al-Raḥīm, and his sons 'Abd al-'Azīz and Shāh Rafī' al-Dīn, all used to compose Arabic verse. 'Abd al-Raḥīm's poem in reply to that by Abū 'Alī Sīnā on 'The Soul' is beautiful. Shāh Walī Ullāh's Arabic panegyrics (in praise of the Prophet) with Persian commentaries by the same author, have been published and are much appreciated. Shāh 'Abd al-Azīz also sang the praises of the Prophet. Rafī' al-Dīn enlarged the poem of his grandfather on 'The Soul' by adding three hemistiches more to every couplet.

Muḥammad Bāqir of Madras (d. 1220/1805) left an Arabic Diwān; but I have failed to find a copy in any library. He was a prolific writer and left many works.

The most important Arabic poet of India is Ghulām 'Alī Āzād Bilgrāmī, of whom a short biographical has already been given. Just as Amīr Khusrāw enjoys the reputation of being the greatest Persian poet of India, Āzād holds a similar place in respect of Arabic poetry. But while it may be said of Amīr Khusraw that he was not an Indian in the strict sense of the word, as his father only came to India from Persia, Āzād was entirely Indian, as his ancestors had migrated to India several generations back.

Āzād left seven Diwāns, selections from which have been published under the title of Sab'ah Sayyārah (سبعة سياره). He composed a large number of panegyrics in praise of the Prophet, and collected these poems in a separate book with the title Tasliyat al-Fu'ād (تسليت القواد). He has rightly won the title of Ḥassān al Hind, in comparison with Khāqānī, who is known as Ḥassān al-'Ajam.

That the poetry of Āzād has not received general recognition outside India, is due to the conditions of the times in which he lived. Communications and interchange of literary products between India and Egypt or Arabia were not so easy as those between Persia and India in the days of Khusrāw. Moreover, every country has its own prejudice against the poetry produced by foreigners in its own language. Persians, for instance, will not recognise the worth and merit of Persian poetry produced by foreigners, and Amīr Khusraw and Fayḍī do not enjoy the the same amount of appreciation and admiration in Persia as they do in India or Turkey. Yet when the panegyrics of Āzād reached the scholars at Madīnah, they appreciated them and presented them to the Sanctuary. When 'Abd al-Wahhāb Ṭanṭāwī, an eminent man of letters in Makkah, with whom our poet read Ḥadīth heard his pupil's Qaṣā'id, he much appreciated them, and when he learnt the meaning of his poetical name, Āzād, he said at once سیدی انت من عتقاء الله : Sir, you are one of those whom God has set free.

Āzād was a born poet and had a fine taste for poetry. He composed poems in Persian also. He is the author of two Persian books on Persian poets which are much appreciated and used by scholars. It is rather strange that Brockelmann's great history of Arabic literature contains no reference whatsoever to him or his work, although he mentions several Indian authors. Perhaps it may be due to the fact that he had not come across any work by Āzād. His Subḥat al-Marjān, which is the first book of its kind, was lithographed in Bombay as early as 1885. This book has already been noticed.

Āzād wrote a long poem of 105 couplets, entitled Mir'āt al-Jamāl, describing and praising all the parts of the body, from the head to the foot, of the beloved, two couplets being devoted to each and every part. Nawwāb Ṣiddīq Hasan, a prolific writer and a learned scholar of India (d. 1890), who reproduced this poem in his Nashwat al-Sakarān, says that Āzād was the first poet to compose this sort of poem in Arabic. Of course, solitary verses in praise of various parts of the beloved's body are found more or less in the poetry of every poet. But just as Ṣafīyy al-Dīn Hillī was the first poet to compose a Badī'iyyah, though single examples of the figures of speech had been in existence for a long time, so Āzād's Mir'āt al-Jamāl is the first poem of its kind. Āzād himself says that he laid the foundation and started the building. Whosoever came after him would simply add to the edifice. But 'no one,' says Nawwāb Ṣiddīq Ḥasan, 'has so far added anything to it.' A few verses from this poem may be cited here, to show the nature of the poem and also to point out the peculiarities of Āzād's poetry.

مطلق الحسن

(Beauty in General)

بي ظبية من اروق الحنان من مثلها في عالم الامكان
شمس تباهى بالسنا امة لها و كواكب اخرى من العلمان

(I have—a beloved—whose beauty is as that of a gazelle of the valley of Abraḡ al-Hannān—noted for the beauty of its inhabitants—. Who is like unto her in this world? The sun that boasts of its light is a maid-servant to her, and the other stars are her pages.)

الطفيره

(A Lock of Hair)

اضفيران على باض خدودها او في كتاب الحسن سلسلتان
اوليتا العيدين اقبلتا معاً او من قصائد هم معلقتان

(Are there two locks of hair on the whiteness of her cheeks, or two marginal columns on the book of beauty, or two nights of the two 'Id festivals that came together, or are they two of the Seven Panegyrics—hung on the Ka'bah)?— In the last hemistich, the face of the beloved has been compared to the Ka'bah which the Muslims venerate.

(Forehead)

لله جبهتها المضيئه في الدحى وهب الاله له علو مكان
هي نصف بدر كامل لكتها ثر بو على القمرين في اللعان

(How beautifully her forehead shines in the darkness! God has bestowed on it a lofty place. Though it—the forehead—is one-half of the full moon, yet it is above the two full moons i.e., cheeks), in brightness.)

العاجب

(Eyebrow)

ابصر حواجبها و ادرك كنهها غصنان منحنيان في وسط البان
او كافران هشاوران ليوقعا آمالنا في موقع الحرمين

(Look at her eyebrows and understand their nature. They are two curved branches at the centre of the Bān tree, or two infidels consulting together in order to frustrate our hopes)

One of the meanings of Kufr is 'darkness', hence the two eyebrows are compared to two Kāfirs.

العين

(Eye)

طرفا الحبيبه ماكران تمارضا و تعانلا عن رويه الجبران
او نرجسان على غصين واحد و هما بماء مسكر نضران

(Both the eyes of the beloved are cunning and pretending to be sick and to neglect looking at the neighbours. Or they are two narcissuses on a small bough, and both of them are fresh on account of intoxicating water.)

In short, these fifty stanzas, each consisting of two verses, contain a poetical and fanciful description of fifty parts of the beloved's body, and the remaining five verses form the conclusion of the poem. In this conclusion he gives the date of the composition, namely, (1187/1773) and claims originality for the poem, saying :

ما ان سمعنا بها عن شاعر آزاد للطرز المنشط بان

The following verses taken at random from Āzād's poetical works other than the Mir'āt al-Jamāl from which we have just quoted several couplets, may further indicate his style :

الا لكل حسين الوجه اشباه ولا نظير لمن اهواه الا هو

(Every beautiful person has matches, but to my beloved there is no match except himself.)

فرد جليل لا يشاهد مثله من ثم رويته شفاء الا حول

(He is a dignified unit whose parallel is never seen. Hence looking at him is a cure for the squint-eyed.)

يا ايها الملك الرفيع جناحه لم يلف في كل الوري لك ثالي
ظل لرب العرش انت وطاهر ان لا يكون لواحد ظلان

(O king having a lofty threshold, no match to you can be found among all the creatures. You are the shadow of the Lord of the Divine throne and it is obvious that one person does not have two shadows.)

ان تبغوا ماء الحياة فذا لكم في الهند لا في موضع الظالمات

هي خمرة الشارين كرامه اذ انت تحسبها عقيقاً ذائباً

(It is wine for the drinkers or you may regard it as melting ruby.)

السرو يرجو ان يعيس كقده و يفوز فوى الارض بالخطوات
والورد امل ان يكون كخذه فاتي بسط الكف لادعوات

(The cypress tree wishes to swagger like his stature and to move about with steps on the earth and ; the rose desires to be like his cheek and so it has appeared with a palm open for prayers.)

صدر الامائل مولانا و سيد جنباه قبله الانسان و الملك
شم الجبال تعلت عنده سفهاً وما درت انه اعلى من الفلك

(He is superior to all his equals, he is our lord and our master. His threshold is a sacred place for the man and the angel. The summit of the mountains rises high out of meanness before him, not knowing that it—his threshold—is higher than the sky.)

مروت على طفل يدبج جماله يطالع و صرما الكراريس في اليد
نقات له لا زال علمك رائداً ابن لي باذا لائلثي المعجود

(I passed by a handsome boy who was studying etymology and had some sheets of paper in his hand.

(I said to him : 'May your knowledge be ever increasing, form for me Bāb of the Thulāthi Mujarrad.)

Peculiarities of Āzād's Poetry.

(1) An abundance of that form of fancy and imagination which is foreign to a genuinely Arabian poet, Āzād's poetry deviates from the poetry of the pre-Islāmic Arabs and of the poets of the early Islāmic period in the same way as Mutanabbī's poetry does. At the time of Mutanabbī Persian poetry had not fully developed, and so his poetry was much less influenced by the Persian mind than was Āzād's Arabic poetry, with the result that Āzād's Arabic poetry is richer in fancy and imagination, though poorer in poetical power and linguistic merits than Mutanabbī's.

(2) Āzād is very fond of using figures of speech and rhetorical devices. This tendency is to a great extent an Indian characteristic. Amīr Khnswraw also had the same taste. His I'jāz-i-Khusrawi and Qirān al-Sa'dayn are more or less rhetorical products. Āzād himself introduced several figures of speech, as has already been pointed out. He also composed a Badi'iyyah.

(3) Before Āzād, Hindī and Sanskrit poetry never influenced Arabic poetry. During Akbar's time there had been one poet who used to compose Arabic verses according to Hindī metres, but that was quite a different thing. Perhaps it was meant for amusement and not as a serious literary effort. Āzād introduced Hindī and Sanskrit similes into his poetry. He also made use of some Hindī and Sanskrit figures of speech in his Arabic verses. Examples have already been given in the account of his Subḥat al-Marjān.

(4) Āzād composed Arabic poems in all the forms of Persian poetry. In his poetry we find many examples of Rubā'i, Mathnawī, Mustazād, etc. Arabic Urjūzah Muzdawijah corresponds to Persian Mathnawī as far as the question of rhyming is concerned; but in respect of metres they differ from each other. Āzād introduced the metres of Persian Mathnawī to Arabian Muzdawijah, and composed Mathnawīs in Arabic also. His Mazhar al-Barakāt is an Arabic Mathnawī composed in a purely Persian metre. About this Mathnawī, Nawwāb Ṣiddīq Ḥasan has remarked that it is well-composed.¹

ARRANGEMENT OF THE LIST OF THE ARABIC WORKS WRITTEN IN INDIA OR BY INDIANS

(1) The list is divided under the same eleven headings as the first part of the thesis.

(2) Under each head, authors are arranged chronologically according to the dates of their death or the period in which they flourished. The names of those authors whose date could not be ascertained are given at the end of each section under the sub-heading "Works of Unknown Dates."

(3) After the name of each author, a short biographical information is given, followed by the sources for his life, arranged in the order of date. Then are given cross-references to the different sections under which other works of his are mentioned. Biographical authorities of an author are given only in that section in which his work is mentioned for the first time. In subsequent sections references only are given.

(4) In each section, the works of an author have been arranged under three heads: A, B and C. Under A only printed works are given, with indications of libraries in which manuscripts of these works may be found. Under B only such manuscripts are mentioned as are not known to me to have been published. Under C those works are mentioned the titles of which have come down to us but no copies are known to exist, the source of the information being mentioned.

(5) At the end, the titles of all the Indian works are arranged in alphabetical order, followed by the names of the authors.

QUR'ĀNIC LITERATURE

1. Abū Bakr Ishāq b. Tāj al-Dīn Abu'l Ḥasan al-Ṣūfī al-Bakrī al-Multānī al-Ḥanafī, called Ibn al-Tāj (d. after 736/1335).

Nothing is known of him except that he is the author of several works.

1. Brockelmann ii. 220, 2. Storey 51.

2. Amīr Kabīr Sayyid 'Alī Hamdānī (786/1384).

He was born in 714 A.H. at Hamdān and was a disciple of 'Alā'u'd-Dawlah Samnānī. He travelled extensively. In 781 he with 700 Sayyids emigrated to Kashmīr where he acquired a great influence over Quṭbu'd-Dīn Shāh, the ruler of the country.

¹ Mr. Storey has included this work in the Qur'anic Section of his Persian Literature simply because the author has given the Persian meanings of some Qur'anic words. It is really an Arabic work in which Arabic has been used as the medium of expression throughout. Only the meanings of some words have also been given in Persian.

8. Sayyid Yūsuf b. Sayyid Jamāl al-Ḥusaynī of Multān (790/1388).

One of his ancestors migrated from Mashhad to Multān, which our author left for Delhi during the reign of Fīrūz Shāh Tughlaq, who being impressed with his learning, appointed him a teacher at the royal school.

9. 'Ālim b. 'Alā'u'l-Hanafī Andapathī (in the time of Fīrūz Shāh Tughlaq: 752-790/1351-1388).

He was one of the eminent theologians and scholars of Fīrūz Shāh's time. He wrote a voluminous and comprehensive work on jurisprudence in which he quoted about thirty authorities. He dedicated it to the Khān-i-A'zam Tātār-Khān.

¹. 791/1388 according to the Tadhkirah.

He was an erudite scholar and was brought up in Gujarāt. It is controversial whether he flourished in the 9th or 10th century A. H. According to an article which appeared in the celebrated Urdū periodical Ma'ārif of A'zamgarh for May, 1930, (p. 347), he wrote his Fatāwā for Ibrāhīm Shāh Sharqī (803-844/1400-1440). The same view is held by Muḥammad 'Abdu'l-Awwal Jawnpūrī in his Mufidu'l-mufti ii, (p. 99) where it is recorded that Nizām Jilānī was a contemporary of Shihābu'd-Dīn Dawlatābādī and that his grave is still existing at Jawnpūr. The other view is¹ that he dedicated his Fatāwā to Ibrāhīm 'Ādil Shāh (941-965/1535-1557).

21. Makhdūmu'l-Mulk 'Abd Ullāh Sultānpūrī (990/1582).

He was one of the eminent scholars of his time. Humāyūn conferred upon him the titles of Makhdūm u'l-Mulk and Shaykhu'l-Islam. After Humāyūn's death he was attached to his son Akbar's Court. He played a prominent part in the religious discussions which were organised by Akbar. It is said that it was chiefly due to his bigotry that Akbar became hostile to the orthodox creed of Islam.

He was a resident of Burhānpūr and a pupil of Qāḍī Naṣīru'd-Dīn Burhānpurī. He entered into the service of Awrangzīb when he was the Governor of Deccan. Nizām was the president of the committee of the Indian Muslim Jurists, which was appointed by Awrangzīb to compose a most authentic and comprehensive work on the Ḥanafī Fiqh. We have no complete list of the members of the committee. The author of the Mufīdu'l-Muftī says that he could, with great difficulty, find out the following five names in addition to Nizām :

1. Mullā Hāmid Jawnpūrī, 2. Qāḍī Muḥammad Ḥusayn Jawnpūrī, 3. Muḥammad Abu'l-Khayr of Thattah, 4. Mullā Muḥammad Jamīl Ṣiddqī Jawnpūrī, 5. Jalālu'd-Dīn Muḥammad of Machhlīshīhr.

58. Sāhib-zādah Miyān Muḥammadī (12th century)

1. See also No. 20. In the opinion of the present writer both the works are the same. The difference of the titles is very insignificant. The chief difference is, however, about the authorship. According to the printed copy of تحقيق اراضى هند which the present writer saw at the Brit. Mus., the name of the author is, as far as his memory goes, and also as far as the written notes that he has with him, throw light on this matter. Shaykh Jalāl Thān-esarī, and according to the Āṣafiyyah Catalogue and also to the Arabic India Office Catalogue No. 1730, it is Muhammad A'lā. Hence the one and the same book has been shown under two different authors according to their periods in this work. The India Office Catalogue does not give the period of the author, but according to the Āṣafiyyah Catalogue iv. 434, it is 11th century.

28. Tāju'd Dīn b. Zakariyyā b. Sulṭān al-Hindī (1050/1640).

He was an eminent Ṣūfī scholar of India, who lived permanently at Mecca where his reputation as a great Ṣūfī spread far and wide. While in India, he received education at Ajmer, Jawnpūr, Nāgūr and ħmīr. He was first introduced to the Chishtiyyah order by Nizāmu'd-Dīn Nāgūrī (d. 985/1577); but afterwards he was admitted to the Naqshbandiyyah order by Bāqī Billāh. Soon after the completion of spiritual training, he went on pilgrimage to Mecca where he died in 1050/1640, leaving behind a large number of disciples.

3. 'Alī b. Aḥmad al-Mahā'imī (835/1431).

(For other works of his, see sections I, III, IV.)

B. Al-Daw'u'l-azhar fī sharḥi'l-nūr'l-azhar fī kashfi'l-qaḍā' wa'l-qadar (الفيض الاظهر في شرح النور الازهر في كشف القضاء و القدر) : Delhi 944.

4. Qādī Shihābu'd-Dīn b. Shams al-Dīn b. 'Umar Zāwulī Dawlatābādī (849/1445).

1. Both the text and the commentary have been, by an oversight, mentioned also under C No. 7 of the previous section (See page 296 Supra). There is a little difference about the spelling of the word الظاهر also. In the Delhi MS, it is with ظ, while according to the Catalogues of the Arabic and Persian MSS. in the Bombay University, p. 181 it is with ز. I think the former spelling is correct.

(For other works of his, see sections III, IX. X.)

B. Al-'Aqā'idu'l-Islāmiyyah (العقائد الإسلامية): Rāmpūr 314.

5. Khatīb Abu'l-Faḍl Gāzrunī Gujarātī (959/1551).

PHILOSOPHY

1. Sayyid Muḥammad Hamdānī b. Amīr Kabīr Sayyid 'Alī Hamdānī (died in the early part of ninth century).

We have already known his father¹ as the author of several works mentioned in sections I, II, IV. While twenty-two years old, Muḥammad Hamdānī went to Kashmīr in the reign of Sultān Sikandar, the Idol-breaker, and acquired there a very high position as a saint and religious leader. Under his influence and guidance, the Hindū minister of the Sultān embraced Islām and gave him his daughter in marriage. Besides the work mentioned below, he is said to have written a treatise on Sūfism

[Tadhkirah 219]

53. Hakīm Sharīf Khān b. Hakīm Akmal Khān
b. Hakīm Wāṣil Khān of Delhi (1231/1815).

He was a famous physician of Persian extraction who settled in India and vied with 'Alawī Khān, the well-known physician of Muḥammad Shāh of Delhi, in reputation as a successful medical practitioner and Arabic scholar. These two Hakīms became the focus of the later Indian physicians who traced their sources of learning to the one or to the other. The descendants of Sharīf Khān still retain some reputation for medical skill at Delhi.

and friend of Akbar, the Great. In 988/1580 he was sent as an ambassador to 'Alī 'Ādil Shāh of Bijāpūr, but on the sudden death of 'Ādil Shāh he returned to Delhi. In 1595 he constructed the famous reservoir. The next year he was given the rank of 700 and the title of Jālīnūs-i-zamān.

He was a great scholar, excelling his contemporaries in mathematics and medicine. He was renowned for his wonderful cures. In the time of Jahāngīr he was raised to the rank of 2000, but this honour he enjoyed for a short time and died in 1018 A. H.

4. Muḥammad Akbar called Ḥakīm Arzānī b. Hājī Muḥammad Muqīm (in Aurangzib's time 1069-1119/1659-1707).

He was an eminent physician and a great author. He is rightly known as Arzānī because he made the studies of medicine very cheap in India by translating the standard Arabic works on medicine into Persian. Among his Persian works, the Tibb-i-Akbarī ((طب اکبری), the Mizānu't-tibb (میزان الطب), the Mufarriḥu'l-qulūb (مفرح القلوب), the Mujarrabāt-i-Akbarī (مجربات اکبری), and the Muntakhabāt-i-Akbarī, (منتخاب اکبری) may be mentioned here.

He belonged to a distinguished family of the physicians of Khurāsān. He was, however, born at Shīrāz in 1080/1669. He received his early education from his father who was a good physician. In 1111/1699 he came to India and entered into the service of Aurangzīb who appointed him as a personal physician to Prince A'zam Shāh, afterwards known as Shāh 'Ālam Bahādur Shāh, who, after his accession to the throne, conferred upon him the title of 'Alawī Khān. Afterwards he was patronized by Muḥammad Shāh who gave him the title of Mu'tamadu'l-mulk and raised him to the rank of 6000. He was taken by Nādir Shāh to his capital but soon returned to India. He wrote several valuable works. In addition to the works, mentioned below, he was the author of the Jāmi'u'l-Jawāmi' (جامع الجوامع).

SECTION X

ORNATE PROSE AND BELLES-LETTRES

1. Muḥammad b. Aḥmad b. 'Alī al-Bukhārī, styled Sulṭānu'l-Mashā'ikh and Nizāmu'd-Dīn Auliya' (725/1324).

He was one of the most celebrated Muslim saints of India. His grandfather migrated from Bukhārā to Lahore and then to Badā'un where he was born in the month of Ṣafar, 634 (October, 1236). After completing elementary education while twelve years old, he went to Delhi and studied literature and Ḥadīth under Shamsu'l-mulk who was a distinguished scholar of the age. He took so much interest in polemic discussions that he won the title baḥḥāth (a great debator) from his fellow students. When he was twenty years old, he went to Shaiḫ Farīdu'd-Dīn Shākarganj and entering into the circle of his disciples, later on became his khalifah. Then he returned to Delhi, where his reputation as one of the greatest Muslim saints knew no bound. He died on the 17th of Rabī'u'l-awwal, 725 A.H. (April 3, 1325 A. D.). Amīr Khusrau, the greatest Persian poet of India, was one of his disciples.

SECTION XI

POETRY

1. Mas'ūd b. Sa'd b. Salmān Lāhūrī generally known as Mas'ūd-i-Sa'd-i-Salmān (515/1121).

His grandfather was a native of Hamadān. His father migrated to Lahore during the Ghaznawid period and joined the service of the Ghaznawid Sultān Ibrāhīm b. Mas'ud (451-492/1059-1099). Our poet who was a distinguished scholar was attached to the son of Sultān Ibrāhīm. But he was imprisoned for about 20 years in the castle of Nāy by the order of Sultān Ibrāhīm who suspected him of intriguing with the Saljūq king Malik Shāh. He died in imprisonment. As a poet of Persian he was held in great esteem by men of letters and poets of distinction. Apart from Persian, he composed verses in Arabic and Hindī also. All his biographers have mentioned that he was the author of three diwāns in Persian, Arabic and Hindī, one in each. But unfortunately only his Persian diwān has come to us.

1. Lubābu'l-albāb ii. 246, 2. Tadhkirah-i-Daulat Shāh, 3 Subḥah 26, 4. Abjad 890, 5. Tadhkirah 226, 6. Browne's Literary History of Persian, ii. 324, 7. JRAS for 1905 (pp. 693-740) and for 1906 (pp. 11-51), 8. Āzād 5.

C. Diwān (الديوان بالعربية).

2. Raḍī al-Dīn Ḥasan b. Muḥammad b. Ḥasan al-Ṣaghānī (650/1252).

(For other works of his, see sections II, IX.)

B. Ta'ziz baytay al-Ḥarirī (تعزیز بیتى الحریری) :
Berlin 7756.

3. Qādī 'Abdu'l-Muqtadir b. Qādī Ruknī'd-Dīn al-Kindī al-Dihlawī (791/1388).

He was a Khālifa of Shaykh Naṣīru'd-Dīn Maḥmūd Awadhī and a teacher of Qādī Shihābu'd-Dīn Daulatābādī.¹ He was well-versed in Arabic literature and composed very elegant odes and panegyrics in that language. The undermentioned panegyric which he composed in the imitation of the Lāmiyatu'l-'Arab is one of his masterpieces.

1. Akhbār f. 147, 2. Tabaqāt f. 19, 3. Ma'āthir 183, 4. Subḥah 29, 5. Abjad 89, 6. Ḥadā'iq 299, 7. Tadḥkirah 133, 8. Āzād 11.

C. Al-Qaṣīdatu'l-lāmiyyah (المصيدة اللامية), (some introductory couplets are cited in the Akhbār and some of the subsequent books).

4. Aḥmad Thāneswarī (d. in the early part of the 9th century).

He was a distinguished scholar and a talented poet and was a disciple of Shaykh Maḥmūd Naṣīru'd-Dīn entitled Chirāgh-i-Dihlawī. During the invasion of Delhi by Tīmūr, members of his family were arrested by the invader's men; but when Tīmūr heard of his intellectual and spiritual excellences he showed him great honour and admitted him into his circle. After Tīmūr's return from India, our poet migrated to Kālpi where he peacefully passed his remaining life in teaching.

1. For a short account of his life, refer to p 186 supra and for his works, refer to Sections III, V, IX, X.

1. Akḥbār f. 142, 2. Ṭabaqāt 23, 3. Ma'āl 186, 4. Subḥah 37, 5. Abjad 892, 6. Ḥadā'iq 3
7. Tadhkirah 18, 8. Āzād 13.

C. Al-Qaṣīdatu'd-dāliyyah (القصيدہ الدالہ) : (Akḥbār, the Subḥah etc. contain so introductory lines of this poem).

5. Shaykh 'Alā'u'd-Dīn 'Alī Muttaqī b. Ḥusāmī
Dīn of Burhānpūr (975/1567).

(For other works of his, see sections I, II, IV.)

B. *Naẓmu'd-durar*¹ (نظم الدرر) : Āṣafiyyah
1526; Bengal i. 1054.

6. Muḥammad b. 'Abdī'l-'Azīz al-Ma'barī
Kālikot in Mālābar (10th century).

(For a short note on him, refer to page 243 supra)

B. Al-faṭḥu'l-mubīn li's-Sāmīri alladhī yuḥ bu'l-Muslimīn (فتح المبين للسامري الذي يحب المسلمين) : Loth 1044, vi.

7. Shaykh Fuḍayl b. Shaykh Jalāl Wāṣil of Kā
(in the tenth century).

He was a master of Arabic literature and a poet.
In addition to the panegyrics and odes, he also wrote a review of Fayḍī's Sawāṭī'u'l-ilhām in Arabic prose and verse.

[Tadhkirah 165]

C. Al-Qaṣā'id (القصائد) : Ibid.

8. 'Abdu'r-Raḥīm Dihlawī (1131/1718).

1. Since putting this work under this section on poetry, I have come to the conclusion that it is in prose and not in poetry and so its right place is in section IV on p. 348 along with other works of the same author.

He was a descendant of 'Umar Fārūq, the second caliph, and the father of the celebrated Shāh Walī Ullāh Dihlawī.
